The families Tietz, Joske, Ury, and Knopf originate in Birnbaum, the families Schocken and Wronka stem from the vicinity. Hermann Tietz's nephew Oscar opened the first department store in Gera on 1 March 1882 with capital from his uncle. The first department store in Berlin, Kaufhaus Wertheim opened in 1896. Hermann Tietz opened another in the neighborhood on Leipziger Straße in 1905 and another one in Alexanderplatz. Hermann and Oscar concentrated on department store openings in the east and south of the country while Leonhardt Tietz opened department stores in the western part of the country and in Belgium. At the beginning of World War I, Leonhardt had 18 stores in Germany and 6 stores in Belgium. Hermann's famous stores in Berlin later went to his nephew Oscar.

Series: Veröffentlichungen des Leo Baeck Instituts. HF5465.G6 H4, at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, HF5465.G6H4 1965. In 1773 David ben Zwi (=David, son of Hirsch) lived in Tütz, where he had a farm. His son, Jacob Isaac, died in 1798 in Birnbaum. His sons, David, Isaak, and Salomon, lost their property in the Napoleonic Wars. David and Isaak then opened a haberdashery in 1815. The author's ancestor, Salomon, an observant Jew, obtained a trading privilege and became a deliveryman of both people and goods to and from fairs. He had two wives, Keile Joske and Esther Beer. Keile died young but bore the author's grandfather, Jakob, who took over his father's business. From Esther came the author's great-uncles, Hermann, Chaskel, Julius, Heinrich, Markus, and his maternal grandmother Rosa, called Röschen. The children of Esther, including Markus emigrated to the United States, p. 15, settling in Maryland and in Boston. The author's grandfather married Johanna Quielecki, who was from a Jewish landowning family that held a privilege, p. 16. The author discusses his American relatives, including Samuel Meyer Graupe, pp. 16-18. Oscar was the youngest child, born 18 April 1888 in Birnbaum to Jakob and Johanna Tietz. Other children included Hugo, who went as a young man to the United States; Kassandra, who married Arndtheim; Leonard; and Jenny, who married Julius Tietz, p. 19. Photographs of Oscar and Hermann Tietz between pp. 48 and 49. The family history appears on pp. 15-28 and 214.

DS134.53.Z93 2006, and at Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957, Location S 42/5. The article lists several persons of the late 19th century who were Jewish landowners, including Goetz Cohn, the owner of Zakrzewo, Gedalje Abraham Dzierżowicz, owner of lands in Rawicz [The author of the article possesses a typescript essay, by E. Pasch, Aus der Geschichte der Familie Pasch of Rawicz, p. 53, n. 2, related to this person.]; Salomon Kaiser, the owner of Nowa Wieś [Neudorf] in Chodzież County, citing Kurtzig, Heinrich, "Jüdische Landwirte in der ehemaligen Provinz Posen," q. v., under Posen Province and Vicinity, supra; Salomon Schwalbe, owner of lands in Kołaczków [Rensdorf] in Szubin County, citing Leszno District State Archives court records; and Abraham Rohr, the owner of Golina Wielka near Bojanowo, p. 53. Wolff Rohr, the ancestor of the family and merchant, real estate agent, and renter of lands, was naturalized in Jarocin on 23 August 1834 [See Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 76]. He was married to Lea and both died in Jarocin in the mid-19th century. Their daughter Gittel, also called Jettel or Henriette, the wife of Talmudist and noted Jarocin rabbi Jacob Auerbach. She died about 1865 in Pleszew or Plauen in Saxony, a few years after the death of his husband. Abraham, the son of Wolff Rohr, was born in Jarocin in October 1812 and became a merchant, like his father. With time he started lending money and dealing i land. He changed residence frequently. From Jarocin he moved to Fordon in 1834 and married Henriette Tugendreich, the daughter of merchant and Jewish Community leader Isaac Symeon Tugendreich and his wife Judith (Jehudis), citing, in n. 6, Heppner and Herzberg, Aus Vergangenheit und Gegenwart ..., supra, under Posen Province and Vicinity. In Fordon, Abraham, a dyer, was naturalized on 16 December 1834. About 1839 he left for Jarocin and then to Posen (He bought and sold land and landed properties, but he kept the most beautiful, Golina Wielka, for his family, and died there on 11 April 1885; his wife Henriette having died there on 3 December 1877. They had two sons, the elder being Moritz (Moses) born 5 February 1835 in Fordon, died Berlin 18 December 1896, where he had been a banker and had married the daughter of a Prussian officer, p. 54, and he was buried in Weißensee Cemetery. Photographs of Moritz and Isidor Rohr. The younger son, Isidor (Isaac) was born Jarocin 28 May 1839. [He attended but appears not to have graduated from the Städtische Realschule zu Posen. See high school chapter, supra.] He worked with the Jewish Community of Bojanowo and married Bianka Hoff, born Strebitzko or Trzebicko, in Milicz County, 3 April 1852, daughter of commission agent Johann Bernhard Hoff and his wife Johanna Fraenkel. They had a daughter Leonie and two sons, Wilhelm (Willy) and Leo. Isidor Rohr died at Golina 26 September 1904 and his wife died on 11 June 1919. Leonie Rohr was born Golina 26 March 1871 and married Julius Leopold Grätzer of Kopienica (Koppinitz), Upper Silesia, at age 20 in Bojanowo on 24 August 1891. He was the son of merchant Jonas Grätzer and his wife Johanna Heilborn. Leonie and Julius has sons John, born 17 August 1892, Arthur, born 15 April 1894, and Siegbert, p. 55, born 28 August 1895, born in Golina, and Hans (in German). Leo Rohr was born in Golina on 4 June 1873 and attended high school in Leszno. He had 2 daughters, one named Felicitas, and a son Egon. Wilhelm (Willy) Rohr was born in Golina on 17 April 1872 and attended the high school in Leszno. He took over Golina after his father died on 3 January 1905. His widow, Hertha Jaffe, was born in Bierutów on 3 September 1884, the daughter of pharmacist Eugen Jaffe and his wife Amalia Berliner. He married Hertha Jaffe on 16 October 1906, in Wrocław. She was born on 3 September 1884. A photograph of the couple appears on the page. They had sons Hans, Günter, Joachim, and daughters Ilse and Urszula. In November 1939 Willy and his wife went to Warsaw, assuming the identity of Władysław and Helena Rutkowski, p. 56. Wilhelm died Warsaw 7 August 1946 during the Warsaw Uprising. Hertha died in Kraków on 16 October 1952. Hans Julius Eugen Rohr, the oldest son of Wilhelm and Hertha, was born in Golina on 30 July 1907 and attended the high school in Rawicz. He served in World War I in the Lancers from Poznań. He was baptized into the Catholic Church in Bojanowo in 1938. He died in Jakobsberg, Sweden, on 22 January 1987. Günter Paul Leo Rohr was born in Golina on 30 July 1908 and attended the high school in Rawicz before transferring to the Johannes high school in Wrocław; he then studied classical philology at the universities of Heidelberg and Berlin. He wrote a doctoral dissertation on Plato at the University of Cologne in 1932. He migrated to Brazil and died in São Paulo on 6 July 1933, age 25. Joachim Emil Rohr was born in Golina on 9 February 1910 and attended the Comenius High School in Leszno. He died in Leszno at the Red Cross Hospital on 10 October 1918 as a result of inflammation of the appendix. Ilse Amalia Rita Rohr was born in Golina 6 October 1911 and attended the high school in Rawicz. She studied music at the Mahlerschule in Lausanne, and in Paris and Heidelberg. She was baptized in the Catholic Church in Bojanowo in 1938 and married a German, Andreas Harry Versen. To escape the Nazis, she assumed the name Elżbieta Kowalska, but was arrested and died in 1943. She was hanged by the Nazis for having married a German and having thus "defiled" Germanity. Urszula Ewa Bianka Rohr was born Golina 16 June 1920. She attended the Viktoriaschule high school in Wrocław; with individual photographs of Ilse and Urszula Rohr, p. 58. At the age of 16 she converted to Catholicism. She was hiding in Warsaw on "Aryan" papers and participated in the Warsaw Uprising. After the war she was imprisoned with her husband for 3 years by the Stalinist government. She was a journalist in Warsaw in 1956, p. 59. The balance of the article deals with the family mansion, pp. 59-60; entertaining there, pp. 61-63; cultural activities, pp. 63-65; farming, pp. 65-68; charitable activities, pp. 68-70; and summary, pp. 70-71. The Home was founded by Maurycy Rohr, landowner, near the end of the 19th century, in a building constructed about that time; in 1930 c. elderly Jews from all over Poland lived there, and when they died, were buried in the Jewish cemetery in Bojanowo, p. 22. There was also in the same building a school for Jewish children under the direction of Rabbi Natan Trzaskał, and the entity had farmland on which it grew food for the residents. In 1939 the Generalgouvernement confiscated it and deported the residents and the Bojanowo Jewish shopowners. At that time, the head of the entity was Artur Loewenstein, who left to join the reserves on 24 August 1939, going to Puszcza Kampinoska (near Warsaw), where he met the father of the author of the article. Loewenstein was a lieutenant who survived the war and visited Bojanowo after the war before leaving to settle in Israel. The Bojanowo synagogue was first changed to a public bathhouse for the city and is now used for a rehabilitation center for bone diseases, p. 23. In 1949, the former old age home became a school and is still so used, p. 24.

The Jews first settled in Brätz in 4 December 1738 or at least then obtained the first privilege, p. 170. 85 Jews lived in Brätz in 1793 and in 1797, 110 lived there; in Bentschen 115 Jews, in Meseritz, 563 Jews, in Bomst 205 Jews, in Tirschtiegel 253 Jews, in Neustadt bei Pinne, 443 Jews, and in Scherwin a. W. 738 Jews, citing the Mitteilungen des Gesamtarchivs der deutschen Juden, 1913, Leipzig, 1914, pp. 78*ff*. The synagogue for Brätz lay in the Meseritz suburbs and must have been built before 1800, p. 172. In 1800 Moses Ascher received permission to engage in the raw wool trade. Jacob Philipp Salomon lived in house number 101. Moses Meyer Mahler lived in Brätz on 10 April 1798. The following Jewish homeowners are listed in the index of citizens in 1808: Abraham Moses Ascher, Moses Hollaender, Aron Bendix, Joseph Wollach, Gottlieb Katz, Ludwig Rosenthal, Jacob Philipp Salomon, Aron Isaak Unger, Joseph Cohn Schlesinger, Joel Isaak Unger, Elias Aron Bornstein, living in houses 132-135, 141, 147, and 193-197, later numbered as houses 113-110, 104, 98, and 50-45 in the lists of houses in 1928, p. 173. In 1825 four Jews were listed among the master tailors and furriers in the town: Jacob Meyer, Leiser Loefler, Lewin Ascher, and Meyer Schlesinger; in 1850 Schlesinger was a deputy head of the guild while Lewin and Brunn were masters in the Jewish guild.
The citizen list of 1834/35 lists 39 residents and their professions [Those with ^ are also listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews .., q. v.: Heymann Seelig Kupfer (dry goods dealer), Leiser Brunn (factor), Moses Koppel Asch (haberdasher), Hirsch Brunn (without profession), Moses Bornstein (owns two pieces of real estate), Moses Lewin^ (pensioned cantor and ritual butcher), Isaak Abrah. There were 209 Jews in Brätz in 1840. In 1849 the rabbi was Asch, [the same as in 1834], in 1846 there were 188 Jews, in 1849, 180 Jews, in 1857, 150 Jews, and in 1871, 81 Jews, in 1880, there were 63 Jews, in 1885 46 Jews, with 8 Jewish children of school age. Since 1900, there was one Jewish resident, Rosalie Brunn, the daughter of the last rabbi, p. 174. Dr. Leser Knoller, Director of the Jewish teacher training college in Hannover, was born in Brätz in 1860. The Jewish community ceased in 1889 and its funds were transferred to Tirschtiegel. The synagogue and the cemetery ceased to operate at that time, p. 175. There was a Jewish physician in town who gave money in his will to treat the poor. He was in Brätz in the mid-1800s. The author quotes Jewish population figures for surrounding towns from Breslauer, Bernhard, Die Abwanderung der Juden aus der Provinz Posen, q. v. under "Emancipation and Emigration," supra. He indicates that the town's Jewish population sought better opportunities in Berlin and in the United States and so the Jewish population decreased markedly, p. 176.

When school attendance became compulsory in 1817, Christian schooling was required where there were no Jewish schools, especially in rural areas. One object was to promote conversion. Posen and Bromberg had auxiliary foundations of the Berlin Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews, p. 286. Ida Schenkolowska tried in July 1835 to convert in Fraustadt. Her father took her by arrest warrant to Kempen. The Christian missionary feared that he would take her to Russian Poland in the future, p. 290. The incident

Czwojdrak, Dariusz, "Żydowskie osadnictwo na ziemi wschowskiej od XV do XVIII w." [Jewish settlement in Wschowa from the fifteenth to the eighteenth century], pp. 81-101, Klint, Paweł, Małkus, Marta, and Szymańska, Kamila, eds., Ziemia wschowska w czasach starosty Hieronima Radomickiego, Wschowa: Stowarzyszenie Kultury Ziemi Wschowskiej; Leszno: Muzeum Okręgowe, 2009, 471 pp., with extensive footnotes; at Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, st 5098. Materials from a conference held in Wschowa and in Leszno on 2-4 October 2008. At least one of the sources cited is an unpublished manuscript at the library of the University of Warsaw, two are unpublished manuscripts at the Muzeum Okręgowego w Lesznie (but the Świderski manuscript, noted infra, is also available in Israel [see Israeli Archival Sources chapter, under The Central Archives for the History of the Jewish People] and at the Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957, Location S 42/5) and two are unpublished manuscripts available only in Wschowa. Reliable primary sources on the Jews of Wschowa begin in the second half of the 16th century. For example, in 1581 a man called Szymon (also, Simon) settled on land owned by the mayor of Wschowa, p. 82. One of the manuscripts, Świderski, Bronisław (jun.), Dzieje gminy żydowskiej w Lesznie, Leszno, 1970-1974, p. 4, notes that in 1604 there is mention of benefits for the furriers of the village of Leszczyca. In 1628 there is mention in the old Jewish community of Lazarus of Leszczyca and of Mojżesz Aaron. In 1631 and 1632 the husband and wife Jakub and Małgorzata Salomonowicz and Hirsch (Henry) Sachs are mentioned as creditors of the local gentry of Leszczyca and of the townspeople of Głogów. In 1630 a letter about Mojżesz Aaron, probably identical with the above-mentioned person from old community, noted that the Duchy of Głogów found him guilty of owing 1200 talars. Jewish names also appear in a privilege for the tailors of Lęszczyca, confirmed in 1636. It follows from this that they engaged in crafts, banking, and trade, including but not limited to, activities in Wrocław, p. 86. There is a table showing the number and percentage of Polish Jews at the Leipzig fairs in the years 1681-1699, listed by the number of those coming from and the total percentage from each of Leszno, Poznań, and Kalisz, p. 90. There is a table showing the number of Jews for various years from 1765 through 1789 in the towns of Leszno, Wschowa, Szlichtyngowa, Święciechowa, and Zaborowo, as well at the total numbers although the data are not complete. During this period Jews appeared in Szlichtyngowa and Swięciechowa, although in the latter village only temporarily, after the great fire of Leszno in 1767, p. 92. Jewish settlements in the city probably date from the 1740s or 1750s. The oldest preserved gravestones in the local cemetery are for Rachel, daughter of David, died 6 July 1751. The gravestone also reported her father's date of death as 25 February 1753. The second tombstone surmounts the final resting place of Meyer, the son of Meyer, who died 26 December 1756 or 6 January 6 1757 (based upon the author's field research), p. 92, n. 36. There was a famous dispute in the 18th century between Jakub Emden and Jonathan Eibenschütz. Two famous rabbis from Leszno commented on the matter. They were Abraham Józefowicz of Leszno, the Marshal General, and Jacob Lissa (Lorbeerbaum), known as the Lissaer Raw, p. 95, n. 45. His parents, despite poverty, were able to send him to high school first in Ostrów and later in Posen. In 1857, after attending university, he quarreled with his father, who wanted him to attend a rabbinical seminary, Polish, p. 18, German, p. 36, and went to Leipzig, Polish, p. 19, German, p. 37. In 1862 he visited, among other places, Kórnik and Posen as part of his early academic work, Polish, p. 20, German, p. 38. After 1900 he became physically weak and died in 1904, Polish, p. 29, German, p. 47. The German information was translated from the editor's original Polish in the book.

The title page indicates that Bernhard Stenzel was the first teacher in the Jewish city school in Gnesen, having taught there for 25 years on 15 July 1863. Per Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 26, the name Fromm was found only in Gnesen in 1834 and 1835 among naturalized Jews. Since Stenzel is not listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., he apparently did not settle in Gnesen until sometime around the founding of the school, probably in the 1840s.

Anonymous, "Western Picture Parade," WSJH, Vol. 11, No. 1, October 1978, p. 29. Simon Goldbaum, born in Grabow, went to New York City, and then to San Francisco in 1868 via Panama. He clerked for 3 years in a store and in 1871 went to San Luis Rey, San Diego County, where he operated a hotel, livery stable, store, and farm, raising livestock and fruit from an orchard. He was also postmaster for a time. William, Simon's brother, associated with him, operated the local telegraph. William married Jennie Bieber in Oceanside on 8 July 1890. The Goldbaums were probably descended from Wolff Aron Goldbaum, merchant and bartender, of Grabow. See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 28.

Baranov, Helen Goldbaum, "Simon Goldbaum of San Luis Rey, California," WSJH, Vol. 13, No. 2, January 1981, pp. 121-125. Born Grabow, 1874, immigrated to the United States in the mid-1860s, and lived in San Luis Rey. Goldbaum had two brothers, William and Louis, both of whom married in the Summer of 1980 in Oceanside, CA. Jennie Bieber married William on 8 July, and Louis married her sister. Louis was postmaster of San Luis Rey in the mid-1880s. Simon married in Los Angeles in 1886. His daughter Helen of San Diego was born in San Luis Rey in 1895, p. 121. Helen was born on 13 October 1895 in San Luis Rey, p. 122. Simon died on 15 January 1916 in San Diego, p. 125.

Biernaczyk, Jarosław, "Historia rodziny Goldbaum" [The history of the Goldbaum family], GO, No. 10 (1026), Wednesday, 8 March 2006, p. 19, with photograph of Dr. Arnold Goldbaum. The family originated in Grabów on the river Prosna. The family history was chronicled by Heinz Goldbaum, who died in Israel in 2005. He relied on oral memoirs of his grandfather Adolf Goldbaum, who graduated from the Ostrów high school. [See the high schools chapter, under Royal Catholic High School at Ostrowo.] First mention of the family occured in the 18th century, when in 1797 the owner of one of inns in Grabowo, David, took the name Goldbaum. David's son, Loeb, bought and sold grain and was an active member of Jewish community in Grabow. Loeb had 12 sons and 1 daughter. Most of his children left Europe in second half of the 19th century. The only one who remained was his oldest son, Adolf, born in 1845. He graduated from the Ostrów high school, passing the final examinations in 1865. He spoke German, Polish, Russian, and French fluently, but rejected Yiddish, which he considered jargon. He studied medicine. In 1870/71 he served in the Franco-Prussian War. After the war he moved to Łódź, Kingdom of Poland, in Russia, where in 1879 he married Bronisława Grünfeld, daughter of a local merchant. In 1881 his son Wenzel, later a professor, was born. After the conflict between Prussia and Russia in 1885, Adolf was forced to leave Russia. He could have stayed if he agrred to baptism. The family moved to Germany and settled in Frankfurt am Main. Adolf practiced medicine until 1918 and died in Berlin in 1928. Wenzel studied law in Berlin and married Marie Katz. They had 5 children. The oldest son, Heinz, 1912-2005, was the author of the family history. In 1936 the family moved to Ecuador. Heinz emigrated to Palestine; Fritz moved first to France, where he enlisted in the Foreign Legion, and then joined his parents in Ecuador; Peter lived in England and in United States, but after World War II he moved back to Germany; Paul moved to Peru, then to Spain, and finally settled in Canada; his daughter Suse moved to the United States. Under the rubric "On the chart of history." Dr. Mojżesz Mareus [sic] Mosse, born 3 August 1808 in Meibisch [sic]-Friedland. He was pro-Polish and confronted Prussian soldiers in Buk and in Grodzisk. On 28 April 1848 Prussian hussars were proceeding from Buk to Opalenica with the intention of seizing Grodzisk. Dr. Mosse led a group of farm workers in Doktorowo against the Prussians. He was arrested as a result of the confrontation, tortured, beat with rifle butts and was found about 100 feet from his house. The Prussians, thinking that he was dead, left him there. The next day they returned to the house and arrested him. He was taken to the fortress in Poznań and from there to Kostrzyn (Küstrin). He was there until 28 June 1848 and then returned to Grodzisk. He died in Grodzisk on 10 November 1865 and was buried in the Jewish cemetery there, a cemetery which no longer exists. On his gravesite a large stone was erected and his portrait engraved on the marble stone, portraying him as the chief defender of Isaak/Eduard was born to David and Rebekka Lasker, p. 345. The second son of Rabbi Meier Hindels, Samuel/Schmuel Lasker left Lask for Kempen in perhaps 1769. His first son Itzig/Isaak lived there from about 1740-1810 when he left for Jarotschin. Itzig's first son, Löbel Isaak, Kempen 1760-Breslau 1828. Itzig's second son, Marcus/Mordechai, c. 1765-1845, was an iron and wine dealer in Jarotschin, p. 349. Marcus had 4 sons, including Daniel Lasker, 1798-1852, the father of Eduard Lasker, the parliamentarian. Daniel married Rifke/Rebekka, née Rohr, who died on 2 June 1842, and was the mother of 3 daughters and 3 sons. Dr. Eduard Lasker was the 4th child and 2nd son. Daniel was naturalized in 1834 [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 51], able to speak German, was a material and potash dealer, with a net worth of 800 Reichthaler, and owned a house worth 300 Thaler. In 1837 he gave 100 Taler to the building of a house for the rabbi, and he is a subscriber to a publication of the book, Michat Schabbat, in Krotoschin in 1847, [undoubtedly published by Bär Löb Monasch there]. Samuel's second son, Abraham, 1750-1825 lived in Kempen. With respect to Jarotschin Laskers, Eduard's eldest sister, Ernestine, 1820-1903 married merchant David Meier Sachs, c. 1820-1858 and had 3 children, including merchant Hugo, 1849-1915, who died in Galveston, TX; the second sister married Borchard, p. 350. Eduard's eldest brother, Max, 16 July 1827-Freiburg 10 June 1910 married Florine Weil, 1836-1914, in April 1863. Eduard's 3rd sister, Rosalie, 1838-1919 married District Rabbi Florian Feilchenfeld, p. 351. Eduard's younger brother was Moritz/Moses, later Morris, Jarotschin 19 February 1840-Galveston, TX 28 February 1930. He married Nettie Davis, 1858-1930 in 1876, p. 352. The article offers many genealogical details of other family members not born in Posen Province.

Much of Bilak's data appears to have originated in Kokociński, Wacław, and Kurzawa, Jan, Z dziejów Kępna, q. v., this heading. Photograph of Salvador Krolik and his wife Regina Peritz, 1900, p. 94. Prior to moving to Quetzaltenango, Guatemala, they lived in the small city of Kempen, today Kępno, and married in the even smaller town of Ostrowo, today "Ostrov" [sic]. Almost all of the Jews in Guatemala originated in Kempen, Ostrowo, and Pleschen, p. 95. Those family names are Zadik, Rosenberg, Stahl, Weissenberg, and later Koenisberger, Liebe, Fischer, Zobel, Stein, Rosenthal, Engel, Guttmann, Weissmann, Kosak, Hopp, Kirsch, Wartenberg, Widawer, Treuherz, Armer, Lewy, Herzfeld, Benjaminson, Schacher, and others, pp. 95-96. Regina was the sister of Bilak's mother, who married on 2 January 1900. The marriage contract/ketubah was signed by the bridegroom, Salvador Peritz, and his two witnesses, Heiman Rosenberg and Julio Stahl. [Cf. Stahl, Abraham, Ostrowo, in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 88.] The descendants of the witnesses are listed, p. 96. Other relatives of the witnesses are listed, p. 97. The author essentially repeats what he said on p. 95 about the origin of the Jews of Guatemala, adding that a small percentage came from other cities. From misspellings, the author clearly does not know Polish, p. 349. He indicates that the archives in Poznań after World War I facilitated the Jews leaving the German Reich. [The author apparently means that the archives enabled persons to do genealogical research to prove a right to live in Poland by reason of Polish citizenship.], pp. 350-351. The author states that at the time of his visit to Ostrów, Pleszew, Kępno, and Adelnau, the first had a population [in the 1960s] of 60,000, the next two of 35,000, and the last of 5,000 [which disagrees with what he said on the subject on p. 95. The author's parents married in Quezaltenango in 1897, the first Jewish marriage in Guatemala, p. 416. In the second half of the 19th century a railroad line was built between Ostrów and Poznań, thereby facilitating the agricultural and industrial development of the region, p. 418. Many Jews from Kępno, Ostrów, and Pleszew migrated to Hamburg. These persons were named Rabinow, Samuel Israel, Adolf Hinrichsen, Eduard Bauer, Benjamin Simon, Henry Gowa, Isaac Delbanco, Joseph Schoenfeld, Moritz, Meyer Da Costa, Sigismundo Weil, Max Kimmelstiel, D. Muenden, Leopoldo Abt, Emil Behrens, Siegfried Freundlich, Ferdinand Rosenstern, and Max Warburg. Many of these had cultural and commercial relations with Guatemala and El Salvador. Exporting families were those of Weil, Rabinow, Aaron Bauer, Rosenstern, Embden, Simon Israel, Luria, Julius Bilak [see next entry], Rudolph Liefmann, Zadik, Davidsohn, and the bankers Warburg, Behrens, Hinrichsen, Da Costa Meyer, and Delbanco, p. 419. Photograph, c. 1900, of Mauricio Sthal [Stahl ?] and Mrs. Sofia Wartenberg, mother of Gerardo and Rudolfo, resident in Guatemala City. Mauricio Stahl, husband of Mrs. Kila, the youngest of the brothers Adolfo, Julio, and Máximo, as well as Zadik Peritz, grandfather of the author, shown. Adolfo Stahl, with his brothers, donated to the inhabitants of Kępno, the building that appears in the photograph, p. 421. Under the rubric, "History of the Israelite Community in Kępno, Wielkopolska." the author states that the Jews began to settle in Kępno in large numbers in the second half of the 17th century, when in 1669 their rights were confirmed. The first Jews settled there before the Protestants arrived from Silesia. Initially 10 Jewish families settled in the town and then many more. The privilege of settlement was issued on 16 May 1674. The Jews, in return for a large tax, had the right to construct a street with houses solely for themselves and with the right to sell the houses in this street. They also received the right from the landlord to construct a synagogue, a school, a house for the rabbi and for the school principal, baths at the house of the cantor, and a cemetery. They had the right to sell woolen, silk, and linen cloth, fish, herring, salt, bread, butter, wine, tobacco and other goods. They had the right to have a tailor shop and a furrier shop. Under heavy penalty, they were forbidden to purchase liturgical objects of the Catholic churches. In the event that a Christian brought a case against a Jew, he first had to apply to the rabbi and if the judgment appeared unjust to him, then he could appeal to the owner of the town. On the other hand, if the accuser was a Jew, he first had to apply to the owner of the town. The mayor had no right to judge those matters, p. 427. The Magdeburg Law did not apply to the Jews [of Kępno], only the Royal Law of Poland, with penal issues to 100 grams of pure silver to be judged according to Jewish regulations, while in more serious matters, the Jews had to swear on the Ten Commandments, pp. 427-428. If a Jew was attacked by a Christian, the neighbors and the municipal authorities had to help him. Very severe penalties attached to those who maltreated a Jew. The Code declared, "God help the one who killed a Jew." A culpable Christian was then punished with death. The municipal guardians watched the street and the houses of the Jews, especially at night. New Jewish immigrants had the right to the same privileges and were exempt from tax for a year. Afterwards, they had to pay one gold ducat, equivalent to 12 Polish guldens, on St. Martin's Day every year. The Jewish butchers paid 150 guldens. Additionally, they gave the owner of the town a certain amount of tallow and offal for his dogs. In return the butchers could set up shop in the main square, free of other taxes. The Protestants had a monopoly on handicrafts, and the Jews had a monopoly on trade. The Catholic population began to compete with both groups. Eventually, the Jews had representatives on the town council. At the end of the 18th century, the Jews had their own artisans, tailors, shoemakers, carpenters, masons, bakers, butchers, and others, p. 428. In 1723, the Jews of Kępno were indebted to a convent of monks in Wieruszów [Wilhelmsbrück, in German, and near Kempen], pp. 428-429. In 1793 the Jews of Kępno included watchmakers, jewelers, etc., as well as 5 "scientists" and 10 master craftsmen. Under Prussia, they had a synagogue, school, hospital, cemetery, and their own group of firemen. At the beginning of the 19th century, they paid a tax of 12 groszy per person. [The frequency of the tax payment is not specified.] At that time, the Jews constituted half the population of Kępno. In 1821 it was the fourth most numerous Jewish community in Prussia [a highly doubtful statistic.] Of the 4,192 inhabitants of the city, 3,556 were Jews. In 1840, the number was 3,577. Thereafter, the number diminished due to a cholera epidemic in 1848. The most important Jews founded an association to help those Jewish children orphaned in the epidemic. These leaders were Izaak Henschel [See Luft, Ibid., p. 35.], Mose Arnstein, [Ibid, p. 2], Izaak Landau [Cf. Landau, Samuel, Kempen Luft, p. 50], Hirsch Spitz, and Dr. Jakobsohn. In addition there was an organization to aid the poor, to care for women and the Israelite Association of Literature and History. The merchant Hermann Bloch had charge of the direction of the Municipal Council for a long time, and another merchant, Izaak Bloch [for Bloch in Kempen, see Luft, p. 10] and the attorney Simon Schacher were active members of the municipal administration. Others included Schaps, Peritz, and Krolik. The German Reichstag reduced the municipal rights of the Jews of Kępno over their strong objections in 1883, p. 429. They had to pay a recruitment tax and restrictions were imposed on commerce in some commodities. For this reason many Jews of Kępno emigrated to various other cities of Prussia, England, and America. After World War I, in the city there remained 35 families, owns of beautiful houses on the town square, often prosperous merchants. In the first weeks of the Nazi occupation in 1939, all were deported to concentration camps. Photograph of headstones in the Jewish cemetery in Kępno. All that remains in the city are the synagogue, several houses, and the cemetery destroyed by the current residents, p. 430. The Jews were deported after 3 September 1939 to the concentration camp in Lódz [sic], p. 431. In 1674 the Jewish Community in Kępno received a privilege and permission to construct a synagogue and school in that part of Kępno in which they lived, known as "Kamczatka." The exact location of the school is unknown, but it probably operated after 1674. After the Prussian occupation began, the limits of where Jews could live were abolished, and they moved to several parts of the city. having enriched themselves by supplying the army of Napoleon I, in the years 1814-1815 the Jews of Kępno erected a new synagogue of brick, in place of the old one, made of wood. In 1837, when the Prussian authorities permitted schools organized on the basis of religion, the Jewish community erected a new, large building as a school in Szkolna Street, p. 432; no. 6. The school contained 4 classrooms and residential quarters for teachers. It existed until 1875 when teachers there were Wieluner and Hoffman. The Jewish hospital was also an asylum for the aged, located at Rychtalna Street 83, now Sienkiewicza 22, from the year 1828. The purchase of the building for 260 talers and the maintenance of the old age home was possible thanks to the donations of Louis Schaps [for Schaps in Kempen, see Luft, p. 81], merchant of Berlin, born in Kępno. The home existed until the Nazi occupation when its inhabitants were deported to concentration camps to be murdered. All inhabitants of Kępno, Christians and Jews, had to pay the Catholic church there from 8 July 1684 one florin per year and a proportion of certain edible products. The Jews also paid at that time 30 gulden per year, according to a fixed contract. At that time they received the right to practice their religion in Kępno, and they built a synagogue. In 1776 the synagogue paid a land tax to the owners of the town, in the amount of 3,760 Polish zlotys. At the beginning of the 18th century the Jews paid the church 56 florins during Holy Week. The privileges of the Jews were renewed several times between 1692 and 1780. They had their own rabbinical judges and were not controlled much by the city government, p. 433. The new synagogue was erected in 1814-1815 in neoclassical style, the work of masons Frederick William and Charles Frederick Scheffers of Brzeg. Photographs of the synagogue in 1890 and in 1960 (closed). The synagogue was renovated in 1893 and in 1926. At the time of the Nazi occupation, it was ruined and, for lack of conservation, is now in disrepair. The following is a partial list of rabbis of Kępno from 1726 to 1939: Moses ben Hilleb, Moses Mannes, Simon Rehfisch [Ibid., Luft, p.74], Leon Schnittkin, Dr. Lasker Munz, Dr. Louis Lewin, Dr. Henryk Wiesel, and Markus Halberstein, 1930-1939, p. 434. In 1885 Moritz Albert Gottheiner [for Gottheiner in Kempen, see Luft, p. 30] founded a publishing house to publish the weekly newspaper Kempener Anzeiger [spelled "Anziger" in the book]. The publication of the newspaper continued until 1904, p. 435. León Bilak, the author of the book, was born in Guatemala, p. 477. His trip to Poland was in 1973, p. 478.

The family moved to Berlin, c. 1904, where Hans attended school. He served in the German pioneer corps in World War I and won the Iron Cross, which he discarded at the end of the war. He changed his name to Schleger by age 20 and studied painting and drawing at the Berlin Kunstgewerbeschule. He married his first cousin, Annemarie Mendelsohn, born 1906 in Germany on 1 December 1929 and went to England for the first time in 1932. He became a British subject in 1939. His mother was taken on the first transport from Berlin to Theresienstadt and then to the ghetto in Minsk. Her date of death remains unknown. In 1943 he was divorced. He married his design assistant, Patricia Marigold Maycock, born 1928 on 11 February 1956. Two daughters.

Partial Olcovich genealogy chart, showing pre-immigrant forebears and immigrants, as well as those born in Carson City, NV, p. 171. Photograph of the immigrant Olcoviches and their progeny, p. 172. Jacob Olcovich and his wife Dorel Kalischer were married in Kempen on 19 November 1835; Jacob was a letter writer and reader for the illiterate and had the title of "Kommissioner" [sic], p. 173. [No Olcoviches and no Kalischers were naturalized in Kempen in 1834 or 1835.] They had 5 sons and 1 daughter, being Bernhardt, born 1838; Joachim/Hyman, born 9 January 1839; Joseph, born 16 June 1841; Herrmann, born 1845; Helene Philipine [sic], born 2 February 1845 and who was likely Herrmann's twin; Benjamin, born 1847; and Haskel, born 17 June 1843. Haskel likely either died in infancy or did not emigrate because he is not listed in Carson City records. A Baruch Olcovich, born 1837, may also have died in infancy, p. 173, and n. 4, p. 187. The author sets forth his understanding of the Jews' legal rights in Posen but mixes up the situations in various eras and laws and sometimes misinterprets the history and legal principles involved, pp. 173-174. Between 1835 and 1852 19,000 Jews left the Grand Duchy. Bernhard and Joachim arrived in the early 1850s, about bar mitzvah age. They were in business no later than 1863, p. 174. Joseph Platt, originally Placzek, also moved from Kempen to Carson City, NV, in 1862. [Platt married Malvina Basch, later anglicized to Bash, in 1868; the Olcoviches changed their names to Olcott in 1932, n. 15, p. 187.] Rabbi Jacob Sheyer [of Warsaw, Russian Poland] was also in Carson City and married to Amelia, from Kempen. Solomon and Esther Abraham, in Carson City in 1864, were married in Kempen, p. 175. Hyman Olcovich married [on 11 March 1866, n. 20, p. 188] Pauline Saft, born Kempen 1841 [For Saft in Kempen, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 79; there is a Scheye in Kempen, p. 82, but no Scheyer]. They had two children, born on Mott Street, New York City, Henrietta, nicknamed Yetta, in 1867, and Jacob, born 1869, p. 176. Isadore Friedenthal of Denver married his second cousin, Henrietta Olcovich in November 1893. The groom's sister was Henrietta Saft Friedenthal. [Her brother was Rabbi Hyman Saft, n. 20, p. 188.] The Olcoviches, Safts, and Friedenthals were all Kempen natives. One of Pauline's two sisters married a Sheyer from Kempen, p. 183. The Carson City, NV, Morning Appeal of 27 September 1895 listed the death of Dorel Olcovich, age 80, in West Point, NE, in the home of Helene Goldsmith, née Olcovich, p. 184. The Kalischers [Most of the Kalischers were from Lissa; see Luft, p. 42], Baruchs [There was one widow Baruch in Kempen, noted in Luft, p. 5], and Sheyers, all of Kempen, were related and one child, Baruch Olcovich died there at birth, n. 32, p. 188.

At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957, location S42/5; at the Jewish Historical Institute, D.94; and at Herder-Institut Marburg, 32 III FZ 1-PA. The first record of a synagogue in Kępno was in 1689. The current synagogue was built between and 1815 by settlers from Brzeg, Silesia; they were two brothers Friedrich Wilhelm and Karl Friedrich Scheffler. The synagogue was renovated in 1893 and again in 1924-1925. The architecture attracted the attention of the Polish Jewish architect Szymon Zajczyk, who wrote an article on it, published in the BHS, Vol. 7, 1939, q. v., infra, this heading. Other synagogues in Posen were disassembled starting in 1908. Because of its architecture, this synagogue links Wielkopolska to Silesia. After the main synagogue in Warsaw, built 1875-1877 by the architect Leander Marconi, this synagogue was considered the most beautiful in Poland.

Gabriel Schwarz and his brother Sam, who was wounded in the Civil War on the Confederate side, settled in Waller County, TX, 50 miles northwest of Houston. By 1873 they had persuaded their brother, Rabbi Heinrich (Chayim) Schwarz, then 49, to bring his Torah scrolls to Texas. [The naturalized Jews in Kempen surnamed Schwarz were Baruch, Hiller Gerschel, Israel Gerschel, and Salomon Gerschel. Heinrich might be Hiller and Salomon might be Samuel. See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 84.] He had previously been rabbi in Reichenbach, Allenstein, and Gumbinnen, in East Prussia, settling in Hempstead, TX, and keeping a notebook, now owned by his great-grandson, William Roddy of Waco, TX. Rabbi Schwarz was also the great-grandfather of Robert Schwarz Strauss, former chairman of the Democratic party and Ambassador to the Soviet Union. Heinrich Schwarz brought with him his wife Julia (Gittel) Nathan and their youngest sons and daughters, arriving in the Spring of 1873 before Shavuot. They had constructed a chapel, Cheychal Chayim, by 1888 for about 30-50 Jews, many being family from Posen, pp. 296-297, and n. 38. Rabbi Schwarz remained rabbi until his death in 1900, p. 299. Rabbi Schwarz's son Leo traveled back to Europe for a bride, Selma Weinstein, also a descendent of a rabbinical family. He married her there in 1884, p. 308 and n. 98. These documents, however, do not provide a complete set of data. They reach back only to 1793 but with numerous gaps due to the events of World War II. The surviving documents contain information on the organization of Jewish communities, some of their activities, and lists of names and/or birth and death records. The scarcest are materials on the ownership of land and those on cemeteries, p. 28.
One of the few sets of records on Jewish cemeteries appears in Akta miasta Kościana [Documents of the town of Kościan], no. 696. Therein is a record of the manner in which the Jewish cemetery in Kościan followed the order of the Prussian authorities issued in May 1816 for Jewish communities to secure, for their own use, areas for burial. The Jewish community in Kościan was one of many such communities in the area of the Prussian partition that gained some advantage as a result of the circumstances that developed there after 1793 [the Second Partition of Poland].

The earliest Jewish settlements in the Kościan region and in Kościan itself date to 1398, [citing Lewin, Louis, Geschichte der Juden in Lissa, (q. v., under Lissa), n. 2, p. 32]. In 1578 Kościan obtained rights under the law "de non tolerandis Judaeis" [citing p. 23 of Guldon, Zenon, and Wijaczka, Jacek, "Ludność żydowska w Wielkopolsce w drugiej połowie XVIII wieku," pp. 18-44, in Topolski, Jerzy, and Modelski, Krzysztof, eds., Żydzi w Wielkopolsce na przestrzeni dziejów, q. v., under "Jewish Life in Posen between the First Partition and World War I," n. 3, p. 32]. New communities appeared again at the beginning of the 19th century. In 1809 only 1 Jew lived in Kościan while 11 Jews lived in Kościan in 1811. Because so few Jews lived in Kościan and the surrounding district made it difficult for the community to follow the 1816 order. Eventually [no date given], the Jewish community purchased land for the cemetery to be used for that purpose for the next 100 years. [N. 6, p. 32, indicates that it is incorrect that the date 1830 was the first year for the Jewish cemetery.] The Jewish cemetery in Kościan exited until 1922. With the progressive decrease int he number of members, the community dissolved itself on 1 January 1922 and transferred the synagogue to the town authorities. The rest of the property held by the community was sold to the town authorities on 26 April 1922. The last funeral took place on 23 April 1924, [citing in n. 7, p. 32, the document in the District State Archives in Leszno as Akta Starostwa Powiatowego w Kościanie, sygn. 110, k. 9; and Urząd Stanu Cywilnego w Kościanie, deaths 1924, k. 66, but not giving the name of the deceased]. In 1940/1941 the cemetery was completely destroyed, and the land has transformed into orchards and arable land. Only the burial chapel as well as a portion of the wall which surrounded the cemetery survives today. No gravestones survive, p. 29.

Document 1: 12 August 1816, a record stating that in the continuing absence of Szmey Dawid Dan, a merchant domiciled in Kościan, the members of the Jewish community present at the meeting in Kościan, [those marked with * followed by "p." and a number indicate the page in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., on which the name appears] Abraam Goltszmit [*Abraham Goldschmidt, merchant, p. 29], Jonas Goltsztein [*Jonas Goldstein, tradesman, p. 30], Getz Wiener, Michel Honig, merchant, Wolf König, Mozes Kotaner, tradesman, Lewin Konski [*tailor, p. 47], Herman Kuhn, Wolf Borach, dressmaker [*Wolff Borach, tradesman, p. 11], and Isac Abraam Goltsztein [signed by Schmeye David Dan, Jonas Goldstein, J. Honig and 6 signatures in Hebrew], request a three-day postponement of the enforcement of the 25 May 1816 order of the Prussian authorities.

Document 2: 18 August 1816, an request, clearly from a Kościan town official, asking the city council to set the amount that the Jewish community should pay for the land to be used as a Jewish cemetery and to decide whether the payment should be all at once or in installments.

Document 3: 23 August 1816, in which the representatives of the Kościan Jewish community, Schmey Dawid, merchant, Abraham Goldschmidt, and Wolff Borach, complain that the price for the land belonging to the town of Kościan is too high, and that the land itself is not suitable because it is mainly sand, p. 30.

Document 4: Land purchase contract dated 19 November 1816, sold by Idzi Hendrych [sometimes listed as "Idzi Hedrych"], miller, to Szmei Dawid and Abraham Goldszmidt, merchant, of the town of Kościan, for 700 złotys, in perpetuity, with the necessary deed and title of ownership, to be used as a cemetery. Signed in Hebrew by Schmeye Dawid Dann and by Abraham Goldszmidt as well as others including a notary, pp. 31-32.

KRÖBEN/KROBIA

Czwojdrak, Dariusz, "Judaica: Synagoga w Krobi" [Judaica: The synagogue in Krobia], IKT, May-June 2005, 3/2005, pp. 21-22. The synagogue in Kościan was converted after World War I into a social services location. In Sarnowa the synagogue was converted into an infant nursery. In Piaski Wielkopolski the synagogue was converted into a private home, and in Rawicz the synagogue was converted into a Catholic Church. The synagogues in Śmigiel, Krzywin, and Jutrosin were demolished. There were active synagogues in Leszno, Bojanowo, Wolsztyn, Borek Wielkopolski, Wschowa (to 1938), Kobylin, and Krobia (to 1934), p. 21. Five synagogues in southwest Wielkopolska have survived to the present: Leszno, Wolsztyn, Piaski Wielkopolski, Sarnowa, and Bojanowo. The synagogue in Krobia was demolished in 1993. The building, over 100 years old, disappeared with no sign of any interest from the renovators of the site. However, photographs taken a few weeks before the demolition team began have survived. [The article does not discuss their location.] The owner of the property saved a stained-glass window with a Star of David. He keeps it in his basement. The synagogue was built in the mid-19th century in the backyard of one of the townhouses near the market square, largely financed by the Jewish families living in Krobia. Some of them, such as Jakub and Breine Hirsch and their descendants, in recognition of their help in building the synagogue, obtained the right from the Jewish community to free entrance to the synagogue, i. e. they did not have to buy a seat. The synagogue was made of brick, 1 storey high with an attic that was usable. The foundation was made of fieldstones and the roof had 2 eaves covered in tiles. On the ground floor there was a 2-room apartment for the cantor and mohel and sometimes also a teacher of religion (all in one person). On the upper level there was a prayer room divided by a wall made of wooden boards with pews and a pulpit, upon which 18 candle holders were located. To ascend to the upper floor there was a staircase in a wooden extension to the synagogue. The main door to the synagogue was very ornate and made of one panel. Among the documents with respect to the Krobia synagogue that remain is an inventory of the contents. Even in the 1930s the items listed were in use by the community members. The head of the Jewish Community, Isidor Korytowski, in his July 1933 report listed, inter alia, an ark of the covenant, a large pulpit, 1 Torah scroll, 2 Torah crowns, 1 Torah breastplate, 1 pointer, 5 Torah covers, 3 covers for the ark, 1 silver wine cup, 2 silver candelabra, 2 brass hanging lamps, and the previously-mentioned 18 candle holders for the pulpit. Due to the decrease in membership, as a result of emigration, the community decided to sell various pieces of real estate, including the synagogue in Krobia. The deed of sale was executed on 7 January 1935 between the representatives of the Leszno Jewish community and Francisek Sikorski, the owner of the townhouse behind which the synagogue was located. The price was 2,000 złoty and the deed provided that the building could not be used for entertainment purposes. For the next several years, the building was used as a residence. During the late Fall of 1983, the building disappeared, leaving only the Jewish cemetery as physical evidence of the Jewish community, p. 22.

Dr. Isidore Kalisch died at his residence, 106 Bleecker Street, Newark yesterday morning of apoplexy. Dr. Kalisch was born in Krotoschin, Duchy of Posen, in 1816. He studied theology and philosophy in universities in Breslau, Berlin, and Prague and became a minister at age 25. Because of his liberal view as expressed in his publications, he had to leave Prussia and went to Cleveland, Ohio. He organized the first conference of American rabbis to establish a uniform ritual and prayer book. In 1855 he deciphered some Phoenician inscriptions. A number of his publications are listed in the obituary. He was also a poet and translator from German, French, Greek, and older Middle Eastern languages. He was a rabbi in Newark in 1869 and later went to Nashville until 1873, when he returned to Newark and ceased to be associated with a congregation. as rabbi. In 1881 he became ill with apoplexy and never fully regained his health. He leaves one daughter anc five sons, two of whom are well-known Newark lawyers.

Alexander had 5 children, all sons, p. 162. Two of them, one a rabbi, remained in Breslau. The eldest, Rabbi Moses, went to Holland and another to East Prussia, and the youngest, Rabbi Leib, went to Krotoschin. The author indicates erroneously that Posen was a Russian province from 1793-1918, except from 1807-1815. Until 1761 Breslau Jews were buried in Krotoschin because Breslau had no Jewish cemetery. There was a Krotoschin synagogue in Breslau. Bär Löbel Monash founded a publishing house in Krotoschin, and it was in existence from 1835-1910. Bär Löbel married Mathilde Wiener and had 10 children, 5 boys and 5 girls: Julie, Marie, Isidor, Louis, Julius, Charlotte, Rosa, Ulrika, Max, and Adolf. Julie married Heinrich Graetz, who is not named in the next but is named in the genealogical chart. Louis left Krotoschin, age 25, for Melbourne, arriving in 1853, where he started a business, p. 163. The genealogical chart, p. 207, indicates that Louis

A letter dated 9 April 1848 from Bauer to von Willisen is reproduced on pp. 273-283. Bauer states that there are 4,486 Jews in the Kreis, pp. 274 and 275; and that it is hoped that the Jews will be brought over to German nationality; most of the Jews speak both German and Polish, p. 274. The city administrative report for 1848 indicates that there were 2,285 Jews in the town of Krotoschin, citing archival records probably destroyed when the Nazis burned the Poznań archives in 1945, p. 275, n. 1. The Polish general conducting the uprising in the area appealed for support to the "people, namely the Jewish rabble" who were frightened and seized the local police station, p. 278. In Bauer's opinion the Jews lent money at usurious rates, protected by German law, to the Poles so that when the 1848 uprising occurred, the Jews panicked, having lost any good relationship with the Poles, fueled by false and excessive reports, p. 282.

Dienemann was born in Krotoschin in 1875, and became rabbi of Offenbach am Main, going to London in January 1939 and then to Tel Aviv where he died on 10 April 1939, p. 5. He was born in Krotoschin 27 September 1875; one child had died very young before he was born. His grandfather was Salomon H. Eppenstein and his father was Samuel Dienemann, p. 9. His mother died when he was age 15. Krotoschin then had 14,000 inhabitants. In May 1904 he became engaged to Mally Hirsch of Gollub, p. 13. They married in November 1904. His uncle, Simon Eppenstein, the son of the grandfather from Krotoschin, performed the marriage. The first daughter was born in 1907, the second one in 1909, p. 17. The third daughter was born in 1917, p. 27. His eldest daughter married in April 1932, p. 35. In Spring 1933 the second daughter went with her husband and child to Palestine, p. 55.

Baer Loebel Monasch, born and died Krotoschin 1801; his second son Louis left for Melbourne, Australia in 1853. He returned to Krotoschin to marry Bertha Manasse and they went to Jerilderie, New South Wales to set up a shop. In 1910 their son John Monash, born 1865 visited his mother birthplace, Stettin, and Krotoschin, taking along his wife and daughter Bertha. A brass plaque stands on the wall of the old Jewish schoolhouse in Krotoschin to commemorate Baer Loebel Monasch. His granddaughter was Elizabeth Durré, mother of Caroline Durré, p. 364. Baer Loebel Monasch kept a journal, The Life, Labours, Joys and Sorrows of Baer Loebel Monasch, written from about 1855 to 1870. He was born in 1801 and died in 1879, having been a printer, publisher, bookbinder, and innkeeper. He had 13 children, of whom 10 survived, and 36 employees at one time, p. 365. Monash University is named after John Monash; the family name is said to originate in Salonika, Greece before the family moved to Vienna and from which they left in 1681 along with many other Jews, settling in Breslau, Kurnik, and Krotoschin, an eminent Jewish community, dating from the fifteenth century, p. 366. In the 1793-1794 census of Krotoschin, there were 1625 Jews, a plurality of the population, pp. 366-367. At age 15, Baer Loebel went to Militsch to study bookbinding, announcing his new business in the public notice printed by the government (Amtsblatt) in January 1830 [See Monasch, infra, this heading.] His first significant set of books printed, in 1834, was a collection of the new naturalization laws of the Prussian administration, followed by a pamphlet urging Jews to accept the benefits under the new law. He later published religious works, and with the help of his son-in-law, Heinrich Graetz, from 1869 published the journal Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judentums. He also printed books in German and in Polish, p. 367. The Adam Mickiewicz University Main Library holds copies of the Kreisblatt und Anzeiger [district news and advertiser] of Krotoschin, which Monasch published, p. 368. Jolowicz in Posen was also a Jewish publisher in the province but Baer Loeb Monasch produced more significant works for a Jewish audience. The 1833 naturalization decree provided that those who could be naturalized had to have lived legally in the province since 1815, did not wear traditional Jewish garb, spoke fluent German, accepted German surnames [more correctly, adopted acceptable surnames], sent their children to public schools [actually Jewish schools were acceptable], showed their loyalty to the Prussian Crown, and possessed a specified amount of property. In return, they could settle where they liked [within the province], choose their profession, buy real estate, and have certain civil rights. The tolerated Jews, mostly the poor and unassimilated, could not buy land, marry earlier than age 24, and were not free to choose their profession. [Some of the indicated conditions are not entirely correct.] Monasch, being naturalized had a passport and visited Cracow, Kalisch, Königsberg, Memel, Breslau, Frankfurt, and other places. His sons and sons-in-law, having passports due to also being naturalized, were able to legally emigrate. One son-in-law was Benzion Behrend, translator and editor of several works for Monasch. During the 1848 revolutions, Behrend founded, with Louis Cohn and Max Krüger, the Verein zur Wahrung jüdischer Interessen [Society for the Preservation of Jewish Interests], and all were strong supporters of the German side. Another son-in-law, Heinrich Graetz, was the first modern Jewish historian and wrote History of the Jews, p. 369. The Koschmin Jewish cemetery is the only one in Great Poland to survive the German occupation without destruction, pp. 369-370. It is maintained by the children of a local orphanage in conjunction with a high school in Jerusalem. The Krotoschin Jewish cemetery was destroyed in 1940 with some of the headstones being cemented into paving around an old wooden church in the town. Baer Loeb Monasch's plaque indicates that he was an inhabitant of Krotoschin, and famous Jewish printer, and that his dates of birth and death were 1801-1879, not 1876, as most texts indicate; the 1879 date is based upon a 1910 photograph of his gravestone taken by his grandson, p. 370. Photograph of the plaque and its sponsors, including Caroline Durré and Rafał Witkowski, p. 371. The now-destroyed synagogue, built with Monasch's help in 1845 was also destroyed in 1940; the old Jewish schoolhouse is now an apartment block. There were about 75,000 Jews in Great Poland in 1849 and about 35,000 in 1900, the majority of the immigrants going to more affluent areas of Germany or the New World. Most of Monasch's children went to Breslau, Australia, or to the United States between the 1850s and 1880s. Most became successful professionals. The Regional Historical Museum holds Jewish documents, photographs, fragments of gravestones, and one unbroken gravestone, displayed in the foyer for all to see, as well as an 1859 imprint of a Monasch prayer book, p. 372.

Women's rights and social teacher, born Krotoschin 23 November 1825, daughter of merchant Levin Benas, and his wife Eva Benas. She married liberal rabbi Abraham Mayer Goldschmidt, 1812-1889, Dr. phil. and preacher of the Jewish Community in Warsaw, Russian Poland, then in Cracow, and after 1858 in Leipzig. She had 3 stepchildren. After her marriage she lived in Warsaw and after 1858 in Leipzig. She died Leipzig 30 January 1920.

Hyszko, Romana, "Tajemnica lasku przy Ostrowskiej," RK, 28 February 2006, p. 12. With photograph of Bar Loeb Monasch and his home as well as a photograph of the plaque on the building identifying it as that of the Jewish printer Baer Loeb Monasch of Krotoszyn (1801-1879). Online in full-text at <http://www.rzeczkrotoszynska.pl/index2.php?nr=571&doc=9>. The town of Krotoszyn paid the Jewish Community in Wrocław 30,000 zł. for the Jewish elementary school in Krotoszyn. The Germans destroyed the synagogue in 1941, but the plaza on which it was located is still owned by the Jewish Community because it was registered as owned by the Jewish Community in the real property book on 9 November 1939 with no subsequent entries impugning that ownership. In 2002 the Jewish cemetery in Krotoszyn was to be returned to the Jewish Community. It is now a "park" but part of the location on ul. Ostrowska contains apartments which were later built on the land, and the former funeral home is today a library. There are still graves under the surface, but the stones have been removed. The Krotoszyn local government would like to return the property to the Jewish Community, but the land must be divided, with part used as a building and another part as a cemetery. No action had occurred as of 28 February 2006. A memorial (lapidarium) will be considered. A former wall built of Jewish gravestones around a church was built by the Germans, and these stones could now be made into the memorial. A group of private citizens from outside Krotoszyn purchased the land that was the synagogue. The township created a park in that place and plans, despite the purchase, to maintain it there. A stone commemorating the synagogue has been placed in the square by the township, which has offered to purchase the plot. The new owner plans to build a private clinic on the site. The Wrocław Jewish Community has a new leader who has so far made no comment.

Monasch, of Krotoschin. Albert's wife Mirel or Minnie Blashki, 1865-1935, was one of 14 surviving children of Phillip Blashki [Cf. Blaschke, Luft, pp. 9-10.] and his wife Hannah Potash, née Immergut, p. 165. Albert and Minnie celebrated their silver wedding anniversary on 27 October 1911, p. 166. His wedding speech of 27 October 1886, p. 167. Albert's paternal grandparents lived in Wollstein, and his father was born there. His grandmother became a widow so his father started in the timber trade and then traveled for the printing and bookselling firm, Carl Fleming & Co., Glogau. Prior to 1835 the family name was Kristeller (Cristello in Spanish). [For Kristeller, cf. Luft, p. 48.] The father's teacher in Wollstein was Ben Reb Naham David, from which he may have taken the name Behrend. Albert's second cousin was the author Max Nordau, p. 169. Albert was born on 27 May 1845/20 Iyar 5605. His elder brother, Samuel, died as a baby. Albert's aunt Mathilde married Prof. Heinrich Graetz in October 1850, p. 170 and n. 11, p. 200. Albert was related to the Boreker Rav, Schmul Dayin, p. 171. Albert's uncle Isidor married Pauline Wolfsohn in Posen in 1853. [The narrative does not make clear Isidor's surname, but it is probably Monasch; for Wolfsohn, see Luft, pp. 95-96.], p. 173, and n. 16, p. 200, which also mentions Moritz Monasch, bookseller in Breslau and that Louis Monasch left for Australia in 1853, p. 201. Louis went to Europe in 1863 where he became engaged to Bertha Manasse, the younger sister of the wife of his brother Julius, p. 180. [For Manasse, see Luft, p. 61.] Albert had two sisters whom he brought from Posen to Australia, Helene and Hulda, the latter of whom married a teacher, Moritz Brandt, age 42, on 2 January 1878; Moritz Brandt died on 12 June 1889 in Australia, and Hulda died in February 1923 in Berlin, Germany, p. 188 and n. 45, p. 205. Albert's mother died in February 1891, and Hulda went home to take care of her father. Julie Behrend was age 67 when she died, pp. 191 and n. 57, p. 207. Albert's father died on 8 February 1896, p. 191. Albert married Minnie Blashki in Australia on 27 October 1886. She had a brother, Aaron; the Behrends' son Bertie died of diphtheria on 7 February 1895, aged almost 7 years, p. 192. A list of the names of Albert's sisters and of the Behrend children, along with their dates of birth and death, p. 196, and n. 70, p. 210. Albert died in Melbourne on 20 September 1917 of post-operative complications, apparently without a will. He was buried in Brighton Cemetery without a grave marker. Minnie died at her home on 10 December 1935 and was also buried without a grave marker. None of the Behrend girls married, p. 198. Julie Monasch married Benzion Behrend in December 1842. Baer L. Monasch and his wife lived their lives in Krotoschin and were buried in the Jewish cemetery there. The cemetery was destroyed by the Nazis, but Sir John Monash photographed the Monasch gravestones in 1910. (See Witkowski, Rafał, ed., Baer Loebel Monasch 1801-1879: Memoirs, this heading, pp. 203-205.), see n. 10, p. 199. The article mentions other Jews of Posen Province origin in Australia.

In the 18th century Jews began to settle in Kórnik and there was religious tolerance in the area, painstakingly nurtured by the then owner of the estate, Teofila Szołdrska-Potulicka, née Działyńska, and her successors, pp. 111 and 113. In Kórnik there was a wooden Jewish house of prayer from 1767, funded by Teofila Szołdrska-Potulicka, née Dzialyńska. The exterior and the bima are pictured. The Germans demolished the building in 1940, p. 117. The old entrance to the synagogue from the market square is pictured with Jewish gravestones from the Jewish cemetery, destroyed by the Germans in 1940, showing the plaques in Hebrew and Polish that describe the synagogue, p. 118, with text, p. 119. Jews were not permitted to settle in Bnin, which likely contributed to the ultimate prevalence of Kórnik over Bnin, p. 135.

LISSA/LESZNO

The State Archives in Leszno, Poland holds 23 files on censuses of the Jews from 1796-1814. See "21 Akta m. Leszno," record group numbers 500-508, 511-513, 515, 517-520, and 522. Additionally, it holds a list of Jewish deaths for the year 1825 in "403 Gmina Wyznaniowa Żydowska w Lesznie," Record Group 2.

For a list of vital records and related information, see the JRI-Poland webpage for the town, http://jri-poland.org/town/leszno.htm/.

For a general discussion of how to navigate the files in the following 3 archival holdings, see the discussion following the listing of state archives in the chapter entitled "List of Polish Archives Holding Materials for Territory Formerly in Posen."

2. "Zestawienie nieruchomości należących do Żydów w Lesznie i należnych z tego tytulu podatkow" [List of real property belonging to Jews in Leszno and subject to real property tax] at the State Archives in Poznań. In German it is entitled "Juden Viertel"[Jewish Quarter] and the listings are of properties: residences, wings, stables, etc. A list of Leszno Jewish real property owners and their property, http://szukajwarchiwach.pl/53/4314/0/-/I_512/, from the website of the Polish State Archives' Integrated Archival Information System. Most, if not all, of the names listed use patronymics and not surnames. The list almost certainly dates to the period 1793-1808. The earlier date is when Prussia annexed Lissa and the rest of Great Poland, not previously annexed. Most of the area later became Posen Province. The latter date is based on the entry for Hirschel Ruben Wiener, No. 64, is probably the one who died on 29 December 1808, while Fabisch Tewele Zickel, No. 159, is probably the one who died on 30 January 1809. His father was the Chief Rabbi, David Tewlem who died 1792. The meaning of other numbers is uncertain although they have to do with property values. The first column after the names, headed "Gebind." could refer to the number of rooms. See the Money, Weights, and Measures chapter. The second column is the value but the units unknown. The last column, headed "Summa," is a total,but is not filled in on several pages.

The list may be incomplete because no date is attached to the file; it stops and is unsigned; at least one entry is missing, the particulars of the real estate, p. 4, No. 129; and it lacks several names that would have been expected in a list of Lissa homeowners of that era, notably Mankiewicz, who had their surname early on and who were significant, wealthy members of the community, and the ancestors ofsome persons of that name in show business.

3. "Lista zaległości podatkowych Żydów w Lesznie" [List of tax arrears of Jews in Leszno] at the State Archives in Poznań, a list in Hebrew of Leszno Jews' tax arrears, purporting to be from 1701-1869, http://szukajwarchiwach.pl/53/4314/0/-/I_614/.

His daughter married Rabbi Groß. The sons of Samuel Baeck were Alfred Baeck, not a dressmaker, but a textile industry merchant, who died in Grünberg, Silesia, in 1934; Dr. Salo Baeck, ophthalmologist, lived in Gleiwitz; Richard Baeck, M. D., was a doctor in Lissa, and later in Breslau. Samuel Baeck's stepson, Dr. Max Feldmann, was senior municipal councillor in Brünn (Brno), died 1928. Theresa Baeck's husband was Dr. Simon Mandl, not Mandel. Leo Baeck's maternal grandfather was Abraham Placzek, Chief Rabbi or Moravia and Silesia. His son, Dr. Baruch Placzek, was rabbi of Brünn and last Chief Rabbi of Moravia. He married Karoline Loew-Beer, daughter of an industrial family. Their daughter, Eva Placzek, was the mother of Leo Baeck.

—, "Judaica: Fundacja im. Wollheimów w Lesznie," IKT, Issue 227, No. 3 for May-June 2004, pp. 26-27. The foundation was created on 5 September 1859 for the hospital and old age home in honor of Salomon and Józef Wollheim (Kranken- und Sichenhaus Wollheimische Stiftung). The creation was approved by the highest governmental authorities of the Province on 12 November 1860, and the statute of the organization was confirmed by the Royal government of Posen on 29 June 1861. Salomon Wollheim died in Trieste before the foundation was formed. The foundation owned real property listed in the property book as lots 836, 837, 838, and 792, together with a newly built house and furnishings and capital in the sum of 5,000 thaler. There were 9 directors. In 1878 a sister of the founders, Johanna Schiff, née Wollheim, living in Hamburg, gave another 9,000 marks, and on 6 April 1878, the name was changed to the Salomon, Joseph und Johanna Wollheimische Stiftung by the Lissa magistrate and ratified by the provincial authorities on 6 July 1878. The foundation was located at Promenade 3, today Al. Krasińskiego 11, p. 26. The foundation's 40-50 beds were dedicated to taking care of poor Jews due to their disability, age, and inability to work and without family to support them. Non-Jews could be accommodated but had to pay for care. The foundation did not accept the mentally ill or those who needed hospitalization. The foundation paid for funeral expenses. Later, the number of directors was reduced to 6, and they selected a president, secretary, and treasurer. An executive director was in charge of day-to-day operations, p. 26. After 1919, as a result of emigration, the foundation cared for fewer residents, eventually dropping to only a few persons per year. No documents exist allowing year by year analysis, but the average after that date was probably no more than 15 per year. A list of the number of beds and residents [no names] for the years 1931-1938 is given. The foundation was an independent entity operated under the overall supervision of the Jewish community, but legally supervised by the voivodeship government and after 1924 also the county government, with annual inspections ending in June 1939. It was a well-run institution. The foundation was dissolved on 7 June 1939 and the funds given to the provincial authorities. The information is based upon archival files in the District State Archives in Poznań, records of the Urzędu Wojewódzkiego Poznańskiego, record group 58, p. 27.

appearance. It reopened on 11 April 1905 with many invited guests in attendance. The ceremony was led by Leszno Chief Rabbi Samuel Baeck, p. 2. The remodeling plan began in 1903 but was not accepted, and in 1904 the Wrocław architects, Richard and Paul Ehrlich proposed a plan which the Orthodox community preferred. The ceiling in the prayer room and the style of the interior changed. The location for women was enlarged. A tower was built on the east side of the building for use as a weekday chapel and with a room for the rabbi and an organ. The pulpit was moved closer to the east wall and connected to the ark of the covenant. The main builder remains unknown, but bricklayer and master carpenter and builder Eugen Hollos from Martinsberg bei Waag, the only Jew living in Leszno who had such skills appears to have supervised the renovation. He was discovered through a search of the vital statistics records of the period. The last service in the synagogue was in early September 1939. The Germans removed all of the contents of the building and converted it into a storage room. After World War II, the building was used as a public bath and storage room. In 1956-1957, for unknown reasons, the top part of the tower was demolished. In the 1960s the main room was divided by a concrete ceiling. The regional museum took over the building in the 1990s. Currently, the building is being renovated after the settlement of ownership issues, p. 3.

—, "Z historii: Rodzinny dom Leo Baecka" [From history: The family of the house of Leo Baeck], IKT, Nr 1 of 2003, January/February 2003, pp. 22-24. 1/219/2003. Leo Baeck was born in Leszno on 25 May 1873, the son of Leszno rabbi Samuel Baeck and Ewa Placzek. He had 6 sisters and 5 brothers. Samuel Baeck was a rabbi, teacher, writer, Orientalist, and historian, born on 1 April 1834 in Boskowitz, Moravia, son of Rabbi Menachem Mendl Nathan Baeck of Kromau in Moravia. Samuel was the grandson of Abraham Baeck, rabbi of Lundenburg and Kostel in Moravia as well as Holitsch in Slovakia. He attended high school in Preßburg, studied the Talmud in Nikolsburg and studied to become a rabbi in Vienna where he studied under Eleasar Horovitz. He was ordained in 1860 by Moravian regional rabbi Abraham Placzek, p. 22, and married Ewa Placzek in 1862 (born 28 February 1840 in Boskowitz), Abraham's daughter. Samuel and Ewa had a daughter, Friederike (Frieda), born 6 October 1863 in Bömisch [sic] Leipa. On 6 September 1864 the family moved to Leszno where Samuel became rabbi, living at Comeniusstrasse 12, today B. Chrobrego. There 3 daughters were born, Ernestine (Tina) on 27 March 1865, Louise (Leichen) on 13 April 1866 and Anna, born 27 July 1867, and one son, Alfred, on 15 January 1869. In August 1871 the family moved to No. 36 where the following children were born: Röschen (Rosa or Therese), on 30 October 1871; Leo; Salomon (Salo) on 22 January 1875; Richard, born 22 January 1878, and twins, Karoline and Martin, born on 17 August 1879. Salomon Baeck died on 1 December 1900. Richard graduated in 1898 and Martin in 1899, the former becoming a doctor and dentist in Leszno. Martin studied law. He and Leo served in World War I and Martin received the Iron Cross, second class, in 1914. Friederike married the lawyer Max Feldmann of Boskowitz in 1885. Ernestine married rabbi Leib Salomon of Szereszew in Lithuania. Louise Baeck married Simon Stern, Ph. D., of Waag-Naustadt in Hungry in 1889 and lived with him in Misschitz, Moravia, where he was a rabbi. Anna Baeck married merchant Markus Fischer of Kobyla Góra in 1894, p. 23; while Röschen Baeck married Simon Mandl, Ph. D., of Deutsch Kreuz in Hungary in 1896. In 1903 the youngest sister Karoline joined them in Kostel, Moravia. Anna married a merchant from Śrem, Hugo Adam. Alfred Baeck became a merchant in Poznań, subsequently moving to Zielona Góra. In 1902 he married Regina Todtmann of Rawicz, daughter of a merchant and philanthropist. In 1897 Leo Baeck married Natalie Hamburger, daughter of Kościan merchant Herz Hamburger and granddaughter of Opole rabbi Adolph Wiener of Murowana Goślin. Richard Baeck remained unmarried in Leszno and Martin, the youngest son, married Ella Riesenfeld. Samuel Baeck died on 16 May 1912 after 48 years residence in the building owned by the Abraham Joel and Bertha Sachs Foundation, located at Kaiser Friedrichstrasse 6, now G. Narutowicz. Leszno became Polish in 1920. Richard moved to Wrocław in 1922 and died in 1926. Ernestine Salomon died in Berlin in 1931 and Alfred Baeck in Zielona Góra in 1932. During the years 1939-1945 4 of Leo Baeck's sisters died in the concentration camp at Terezin [Theresienstadt]: Friederike Feldmann, Lousie [sic] Stern, Anna Fischer, and Rosa Mandl. Richard died in Oświęciem [Auschwitz]. Karoline Adam died in London in 1948 and Leo Baeck died in London on 2 November 1956, p. 24.

Raphael Jacob Kosch, physician and deputy to the Prussian Landtag, born Leszno 5 October 1803, son of a local merchant [Cf. Aron Kosch, calligrapher, Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 47], p. 27. In 1812 he moved with his parents to Krolewiec [Königsberg, East Prussia], his mother's hometown, and finished his high school and medical studies there and later became a member of the city council and member of the Jewish kehillah. He was the leader of the liberal independent movement in eastern Prussia. In 1848 he was a delegate to the founding Prussian assembly in Königsberg and a delegate to the National Assembly in Berlin. He was first a second vice-president and later a first vice-president of the National Assembly and one of the co-authors of the new constitution. In 1849 he was Königsberg's representative in the second chamber of Parliament. After the right-wing regained power, he retired from politics and practiced medicine. In 1861 he was elected by popular vote to the Prussian National Parliament. In 1863 he became head of the Parliamentary committee on regulations. He was responsible for the bill enacting immunity for members of Parliament and for the abolition of the oath, "more judaico," in 1869. For a number of years he was the only Jew in the Prussian parliament. He died in Berlin on 27 march 1872 and was buried in the Jewish cemetery in Königsberg.

Stephan Born, also known as Simon Buttermilch, founder of the first German political workers organization, the Allgemeine deutsche Arbeiter-Verbrüderung, was born in Leszno on 28 December 1824, the son of furrier Meyer Buttermilch. [See Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 14.] His father changed his sons' surnames in 1842. Stephan was a printer's assistant in Berlin. He died in Basel, Switzerland, on 4 May 1898. He had an older brother David, born Leszno 30 October 1817, p. 28. He died in Schönberg, near Berlin, on 17 March 1879.

Adolf Hepner, German and American journalist, was born Schmiegel 24 November 1846, the son of a grain merchant. Adolf was first a Social Democratic Party candidate for city council in Breslau. He graduated from high school in Leszno and at the same time studied at the Breslau rabbinical seminary and at universities in Breslau and Berlin. He also operated a bookstore in Breslau. He emigrated to St. Louis, Missouri, in 1872 to become the editor and publisher of the daily St. Louis Tageblatt and the magazine Westliche Post. He also authored a number of books. He returned to Germany in 1908 and settled in Munich where he died at the end of April 1923.

Eduard Wolff, lawyer and later notary public in Leszno, as well as a legal advisor, was born Leszno 6 March 1852, son of Elias Wolff, a carpenter from Zduny. He graduated from Comenius High School, Leszno, in 1872 [See High School chapter; he was graduate number 366 in Easter Term 1872.] and began to practice there in 1882. In 1897 he became a notary and legal advisor, operating a legal and notary office with his cousin Max Wolff. He was a member of the Volkspartei and representative from 1890 until his death. he was also a member of the Leszno City Council and head of the Council, 1892-1894. He resigned due to ill-health and was decorated by the Prussian Government with the Order of the Red Cross. He died as a result of a stroke in Berlin on 31 May 1914 and was buried in Weißensee, p. 29.

Lissa had been the greatest clothmaking city in Great Poland, and Jews sold the cloth. In 1800 it was the largest Jewish community in Posen. In 1765 4,980 Jews lived in Lissa, in 1833 it was 3,960, in 1858 it was 2,578 Jews, and in 1895 it was 1,206 Jews. The synagogue was built in 1626. In 1720 the Lehrhaus next to it had its own rabbi. In the early 19th century 22 synagogues existed in Lissa. Akiba Eger and Jakob Lorbeerbaum (Jacob Lissa) were chief rabbi and school principal there, p. 18. Akiba Eger founded a famous yeshiva there. Jacob Lissa, who died in 1832, was Lissa rabbi from 1809-1821. The position remained vacant from 1821 until 1864 when Samuel Bäck became rabbi, pp. 16 and 19. Province, 1877, p. 13. Posen Naturalization Decree of 1833 discussed, pp. 16-17. Schocken's grandfather Abraham arrived in Schocken to set up shop in the 1830s and took a German surname. Ten years later he moved with his wife and 1 child with one on the way to Margonin. It had a synagogue and graveyard. The oldest written records of Jews in Margonin date from 1688, a privilege for a Jewish artisan to build a house, p. 18, and to brew beer. Abraham's son was Isaac, who worked in a local store. Isaac served 3 years as an army draftee, p. 19. He returned to Margonin, married, and opened his own store. Isaac's first child Simon was born 1874. Salman was born in 1877. About 200 Jews lived in Margonin at that time, p. 20. At age 13 Salman's 90-year-old aunt, Blume Silber, gave him a prayer book, p. 22. After his bar mitzvah at age 13, he was apprenticed to a small shopkeeper in Samotschin. Salman's brother Simon spent 3 years in the army and then went to Saxony to help open a store for a fellow Posen Jew named Ury, p. 23. In 1895 Salman went to Gnesen, p. 24, working for a Jewish linen wholesaler for 4 years, p. 25. Salman, 5'5," celebrated his 20th birthday in Gnesen. In 1898 he left for Berlin, p. 28. Simon Schocken, Salmon's older brother, died in a car accident in 1930, p. 190. Suhler, 16 February 2004, after printing it from the Internet. The synagogue in Margonin lay near the main town square on the street to Posen, p. 3. The earliest mention of the Jews of Margonin was in Hebrew in a 30 July 1688 privilege, which existed in an 1801 translation into German, and was from the castellan of Plotzk, Stepahn Gembicki to the Jews of the town, allowing the building of a new house, as noted in Heppner, Aron, and Herzberg, Isak, Aus Vergangenheit und Gegenwart der Juden und der jüdischen Gemeinde in den Posener Landen, Breslau 1929, Vol. 2, p. 619 [endnote 1], p. 4 and endnote 1, p. 26. Another edition of Herzberg and Heppner is listed under Posen Province and Vicinity, q. v. Victor Aronstein's mother, Henriette née Cohn, was born 29 December 1856 Neuteich, Kreis Marienburg, and his father, Jacob Aronstein, was born 12 September 1844 Slupowo. The Aronsteins owned a brewery in Margonin where Victor was born on 1 November 1896 according to the extract of his birth registration from there, Nr. 151, transcribed on 24 August 1940, p. 5, and now held in the Heimatmuseum Berlin-Hohenschönhausen [list of holdings, pp. 28-30]. Victor had two sisters, Bertha, age 11 when Victor was born and Herta, 3 years younger than her sister. Based upon Gomolec, Ludwik, and Burzyński, Wojciech, Historia Margonina, Vol. 1, p. 44 [endnote 2, p. 26], the Jewish population in Margonin by indicated year was: 1786, 293; 1834, 463; 1858, 492; 1861, 352; 1871, 221; 1881, 189; 1900, 83; and 1905, 53. The local economy was based upon brewing and clothmaking. Due to harsh economic conditions the Aronstein family left Margonin in 1904 for Berlin, p. 5. Dr. Aronstein faced hardships of pre-war anti-Semitism and the Łódź ghetto, where he probably perished in 1944, along with his wife and assistant, Lotte Korn.

Salman Schocken was born in Margonin, Kreis Kolmar, today in the Voivodeship of Wielkopolska (Great Poland), Chodzież county (Kolmar i. P.), with photograph of Salman Schocken. Schocken was born in Margonin, a very small place, on 30 October 1877, and was a Jewish merchant, publisher, art collector, and philanthropist. His parents were the merchant Isaak Schocken and Eva, née Hermann. He left home at age 14 after only two years of public school education to become a textile salesman of dry goods. In 1901 he joined his brother Simon Schocken's (1874-1929) department store in Zwickau and opened his own shop in Oelsnitz in Vogtland in 1904. He also had a merchant brother Joseph (1872-1934), known as Julius in Bremerhaven, p. 131. Salman Schocken gave his department store directors, such as Siegfried Moses, full powers to act for him in the stores that they managed, pp. 132-133. At his death Schocken had amassed a collection of 60,000 books, p. 133. Along with Martin Buber he founded the Zionist magazine, Der Jude, and Schocken founded the Schocken Institute for Research on Hebrew Poetry in 1929 and in 1931 founded his own publishing house, Schocken Verlag, with offices in Berlin, Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, and later New York, publishing inter alia, the entire works of Franz Kafka. When Hitler came to power on 30 January 1933, Schocken was in Switzerland with his wife. He returned to Germany in May 1933. In Autumn 1933 Schocken prepared for immigration to Palestine while his eldest son attended university in Heidelberg. Schocken immigrated in early 1934. In 1935 he bought the bankrupt daily Haaretz for his son Gustav in Jerusalem. Today his grandson Amos Schocken directs the newspaper, p. 134. In October 1940 he began a journey to the USA. Salman Schocken died 21 August 1959 during a health visit to a hotel in Pontresina, Switzerland at age 82, p. 136.

In the nineteenth century Rogozinska Street was know as ulica Żydowska, Street of the Jews, p. 133; At the end of the eighteenth century, lived in the three major ethnic groups - Poles, Germans and Jews. Such diversity was the result of family treatments Gurowskich of the second half of the eighteenth century, designed to strengthen the economy of the city. Brought the German and Jewish merchants and artisans contributed to a significant increase in the number Murowana Gosliny residents, while simultaneously, having obtained permission to rebuilt their own religious centers, wrosli into the city, actively engaging in its development. In the first years after 1815, when the greater part of Wielkopolska is back under the rule of King of Prussia, in Murowana Goslina largest group in terms of the size of inhabitants were Poles, Jews occupied the next place, while the Germans were in last place .... Such a distinguishing nationality also favored the fact that as a result of internal ideological transformation and mental Jews living in Germany largely culturally assimilated August in German society, p. 146; Officially, all German Jews were known to the assumptions for the Germans, ranging from the censuses of the eighties of the nineteenth century. During this time, but the number of Jews goslinskich fell below 200, p. 147; table showing number and percentage of Jews in Murowana Goślina from 1819 through 1910, taken archival holdings and published sources; Jews (Jews), 32.7% of the population. During the next nearly 30 years, all three religious groups have recorded more or less similar to a quantitative increase, so that the proportions have changed little. After 1840, the first time that there was a decrease in the number of Jews, who sweats miasta.agnal time for each other, limit the number of inhabitants of the city. A serious breakthrough came only after the fire of 1847 - the data of 1860 you'll see a dramatic (with more then 30% in less than 20%) decrease in the percentage of adherents of Judaism, while increasing the size of the other two religious groups. Since then the number of population decreased steadily Mosaic faith that even in the nineteenth century fall below one tenth of the population Murowana Gosliny a century in 1910 amount to only 5%, p. 148. Although the first Jews supposedly appeared in Murowana Goślina at the end of the seventeenth century, the Jewish population officially received permission to settle there in 1782 in a separate district in the northern part of town. Almost all Goślina Jews engaged in crafts and trade, most of them brought in as expert clothiers. For the first 30 years of the nineteenth century the Jewish community did not have the same rights as Germans and Poles, but in 1833 the Prussian King Frederick William III issued a "Provisional Decree on Jewry in Grand Duchy of Poznań," which allowed part of the Jewish population to obtain full civil rights. The Decree distinguished between naturalized Jews, having a relationship to German culture and identifying with the Prussian state, and tolerated Jews, who had only those rights when they joined German culture. According to records from 1843, of the 474 Jews in Murowana Goślina, only 176 Jews were naturalized. Later, a further percentage of the Jewish population acquired these rights. After obtaining civil rights, relatively rich members of Goślina Jewish society began to play a decisive role in the local town council. In the 1920s an unknown Goślina history teacher in his study of the history of Murowana Goślina, stated that this situation aroused the envy of the Polish community. He suggests that the fire which broke out on 6 May 1847 in the northern part of the town, and was thus inhabited by Jews, suddenly appeared in several places at the same time and could be viewed as having been set on purpose. The damage caused by fire strongly, p. 152, affected the Jewish community. The year 1847 was an unusually bad year for crops, which could have further antagonized Goślina society. Within a few years after the fire, which destroyed the cloth hall, more or less half of the Jews in Murowana Goślina left the town. The other members of the Jewish community rebuilt their homes. From that time the Jewish community were not longer largely engaged in trade but in hotel keeping and precision crafts, such as watchmaking and jewelry. The Jewish community continued to dwindle. Compared to the middle of the 19th century, by the beginning of the 20th century, the Jewish community was one-fifth the size that it had been, a typical phenomenon throughout the entire Province of Poznań. After acquiring full civil rights, many Jewish inhabitants moved to the western areas of Germany or emigrated to the United States. Only a dozen Jewish families in Murowana Goślina, and they largely belonged to the richest inhabitants of the town. In terms of ethnicity they were already counted among the German population although according to the census of 1910 a Goślina Jew considered himself a Pole. Goślina Jews usually held two seats on the municipal council, working closely with the German councilors. Jews mostly belonged to the German social associations, identifying with the German policy on national minorities. The most prominent representative of the 19th century Goślina Jewish community was Adolf Wiener born 1812 in Murowana Goślina in 1812. He completed studies in both the Talmudic school and the Faculty of Philosophy at the University of Berlin. He then became a teacher in the Jewish community of Poznań. As a supporter of assimilation of the Jewish community living in Prussia, Wiener became uncomfortable with the Orthodox Jewish community in Poznań, which eventually forced him to leave the town. He found a place in Opole, where in 1853 he joined the local rabbinate of the reform-oriented Jewish community. From then until his death in 1895, Rabbi Adolf Wiener led the Opole Jews, working for total cultural assimilation, living in Jewish communities among the German people. For his efforts the authorities in Opole in 1892 gave him an honorary citizenship of the city, p. 153. Until 1847 tailoring was the most important craft of Murowana Goślina Jews. In 1822 the town had 20 tailoring establishments, mostly in the hands of local Jews, mostly producing cloth. Until 1836, this number continued to grow, nine of them reaching industrial size. The end of a strong Goślina tailoring industry can be laid to the fire of 1847, which destroyed the greater part of the Jewish district. The workshops were not rebuilt, and most of the profession who were artisans left the town, except that the Itzig and Chaym families remained in Murowana Goślina. Nevertheless, their representatives thereafter focused on trade in textiles, p. 155. In the late 19th century a few notable commercial buildings were built in town, including three large department stores, led by members of the Goślina Jewish community, first Michael, and later Lewin Flanter; Hermann Giballe; and Simon Lewinsohn, all shop merchants engaged in trade in textile materials. Among the same group of Jews were Hermann Itzig, whose son lsidor inherited the interest, and Saul Chaym, whose successors were his son Carl and grandson Max, p. 160. The restaurant "Zum goldenen Stern," at the Market Square, managed by a non-Jew, was owned by a Jew, Joseph Markowicz. Located at the northern border of the town was a tavern owned by the Jewish family Cohn, led first by Solomon, and then by his son Alfred, p. 161. Jewish merchant, Davidsohn, was elected treasurer, p. 168. The Jews of Murowana Goślina were too few to maintain their own rabbi. So the rabbi from a larger place, usually Szamotuły, came to officiate. The community officials met in the synagogue, in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, led by merchant Hermann Giballe. The Jewish school was probably located at ul. Żydowski , close to the old synagogue. In 1835 the school had 34 pupils and 1 teacher and was probably destroyed in 1847 during the fire in that district. There was a Jewish Division at religious schools until the last years of the 19th century, when a new school was built for all pupils, regardless of religion. There were 7 classrooms when it opened in 1897, p. 174. After World War I, most of the Jews left. In 1922 there were 25 Jews in town but only 14 in 1924. in the early 1920s Alphons Cohn operated a bar in ul. Rogoziński while Carl Chaym owned a mercer's shop and Lewin Flanter, Hermann, p. 192; Giballe, and Simon Lewinsohn operated department stores. Also in business in Murowana Goślina were Markus Bleicher, Hermann Lubiński, Salmon Abraham, and Hermann Leszczyński. Shortly before 1939 Róża and Frieda Lubiński, Isidor Itzig with his family, Shmuel Glaser with his family, and the Lewkowicz family, altogether 11 people lived in Murowana Goślina. The 1919 Jewish Community elections were the last ones due to lack of a sufficient number of board members. The situation was similar in most of the Jewish communities in the region. In the 1930s to eliminate small and economically weak Jewish communities, they were combined with larger ones. By a regulation dated 28 September 1932 the Ministry of Religion and Public Enlightenment created 11 Jewish communities in the province of Poznań. Murowana Goślina was combined with Czarnków, Lubasz, Wieleń, Oborniki, Rogoźno, Ryczywoł, Szamotuły, Wronki, Obrzycko, and Pniewy with the headquarters located in Oborniki. The major expense in Murowana Goślina was the cost of supported the poor in the new community, p. 193. Frieda Lubińska and Isidor Itzig sold cotton goods. In the 1930s Szmuel Glaser sold stationery and tobacco products. Marcin Glaser was a watchmaker, p. 200. The synagogue, located at ul. Szkoła, was built in the 18th century and was an architectural monument. At the junction of Mściszewski and Starczanowski streets was the Jewish cemetery, which also contained historic buildings. Although there were a few marble tombstones, the fact that the majority were of granite bears witness that the Jews of the town were not wealthy, p. 220. Almost immediately after entering Murowana Goślina, the Nazi authorities oppressed the few Jews remaining. The Glaser, Itzig and Lubin families were evicted from the town. Their fate could not be determined. However, at least until 1942 Róża Lewkowicz lived in the Warsaw Ghetto, having avoided the forced displacement in the first weeks of occupation, and then thanks to the help of Poles managed to escape to the General Government, p. 235. Prisoners of war from Stalag XXI B, including French prisoners, were employed during the Nazi occupation in the renovation of the Poznań synagogue as a swimming pool, p. 238. Councillor Alicja Kobus serves as president of the Poznań branch of Union of Jews, but this relationship engenders no activity in Murowana Goślina, p. 361.

See also mention, pp. 84-85, with bibliography, p. 85, of Isaac S. Moses, born Zaniemysl 1847 and where he received his early education, son of Israel Baruch, p. 84. He was ordained by R. Salomon Rosenthal of Jarozin [Jarotschin/Jarocin?], and immigrated to the United States in the early 1870s, p. 84. Entry 158 Home Service for Passover Eve notes that it was authored by William Rosenau, son of Nathan, born Wolsztyn 1865 and immigrated to the United States with his parents in 1876, where his father was a rabbi in several American cities. He died in 1943, p. 145. Entry 293 Catechism for Instruction in the Mosaic Religion shows that the author is Aron [Aaron] Messing, born Argenau [Gniewkowo], 1843 or 1839 or 1846, son of Josef, a rabbi, and studied under Elijah Guttmacher and Zunz; ordained by Guttmacher and others, p. 283, with similar but sparser information in Entry 305, p. 292 and repeated on p. 294. Entry 294, p. 284, mentions Dr. Elkan Cohn of San Francisco [born Kosten]. Entry 1094 with respect to Henry S. Leszynsky, born Murowana Goślina, 1823, immigrated to the United States in 1842 and settled perhaps in San Francisco in 1850, where the family name occurs, but returned to New York City, marrying Mirel bas Abraham Godfrey in 1852. On 25 December 1887 he arrived in San Francisco, going via Ogden, UT and Salt Lake City to visit relatives and returned to New York City on 11 March 1888 through New Orleans and Chicago. The entry reproduces the broadside of the 1887 and 1888 itinerary to San Francisco and back and gives biographies of some of the relatives, with the first page illustrated of a total of 4 pp. The item is in the possession of Yosef Goldman. Henry S. Leszynsky is possibly the son of Simon Lessynski of Murowana Goślin, tradesman. See Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 53. Letter from Julius Eckman, San Francisco, 31 October 1859, p. 1173. Lester Levy's earliest known ancestor in the paternal line was Eleazar Achtzehner of Mur[owana] Goslin; he married Esther Loewe or Lewin. They had 3 sons, Raphael, Michael, and Marcus. Raphael was a capmaker, apprenticed to a distant relative named Gutmann. Raphael emigrated to England and manufactured caps there. He invited his 2 brothers to England. Raphael changed his name there to Ralph Levy, and Michael became Michael Simon Levy in England. In 1856 Michael married Betsy Jacobs, daughter of Elias and Henriette, née Yetta Leisersohn, Jacobs, né Rapynski, p. 157.

Paprocki, Dariusz, Gośliniaków Księga Złota, Biblioteka Publiczna Miasta i Gminy Murowana Goślina, 2004, 63 pp., including bibliography, p. 59. At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957, location S 42/5. Photograph of Murowana Goślina synagogue, p. 35. The Murowana Goślina Jewish community centered around the synagogue, located on Szkolna Street. Although the rabbi resided in Oborniki because there were too few Jews in Murowna Goślina, religious observances were held every day. The most distinguished representatives of the Jewish community made up the ruling council. The last election to this council was held in 1919 because in August of that year most of the Jews left town. Of the council members only two representatives remained, Itzig Isidor, its chairman, and Schmul Glaser, the acting teacher, p. 20; "Ludność żydowska na Ziemi Goślińskiej" [The Jewish population in Murowana Goślina], pp. 35-36, including a photograph of the synagogue, p. 35; Jews inhabited Murowana Goślina since the eighteenth century. The local Jewish community erected a small synagogue and had representatives in the local guilds. During the nineteenth century most or the local Orthodox Jews favored the Germans. During the period from 1919 to 1924, most of the Jewish population left the area, p. 35. The last regular working session of the local Jewish community leadership took place in 1919. Members of the community included Alfonso Caro, who operated a tavern on Rogozińska Street. Carl Chaym, also on Rogozińska Street, operated a mercer's shop. On the Town Square there were the department stores of Lewin Flanter (at 2 Market Square), Hermann Giballe (at 4 Market Square), and Simon Lewinsohn (at 7 Market Square). Markus Bleicher, Hermann Lubliński, Solomon Abraham, and Herman Leszynski had similar shops. Although many thought otherwise, Max Usadel, owner of the tavern Zum goldenen Stern (At the Golden Star), was not a Jew. Until the 1930s there remained 4 Jewish families in Murowana Goślina: Glaser, Lewkowicz, Itzig and the sisters Lubliński. These people differed from Poles only in religion; they were fully integrated into the local population. On the eve of World War II, some Jews tried to flee while others stayed to the end in Murowana Goślina. Immediately after the entry of German troops, the occupying authorities decided to deport all Jews from the city. It is known from Rosa (Róża) Lewkowicz, thanks to the help of Polish friends managed to avoid involuntary resettlement, and then escape to the General Government, even as late as 1942, to the Warsaw ghetto. It is not known if the rest of the local Jews were deported to extermination camps.. After the war no Jews returned to Murowana Goślina, p. 36. "Bolesław Stern: Mistrz rzeźnicki organizator życia społecznego w Murowanej Goślinie" [Bolesław Stern: The master butcher, organizer of social life in Murowana Goślina]. The Treasurer of the Volunteer Fire Brigade, found in 1888, was Davidsohn, a Jew, p. 50. "Isidor Itzig: Kupiec bławatny przewodniczący rady żydowskiej działającej przy goślińskiej synagogodze" [Isidor Itzig: Cloth merchant and chairman of the Jewish community at the Goślina synagogue], p. 57. He was probably born in 1872 and remained in Murowana Goślina until the days before World War I. His father Hermann operated a shop in town in 1904 and Isidor was a merchant from 1909. He owned the building at 10 Rogozińska Street, as well as the adjacent tall building (now No. 8), where he operated a mercer's shop. He was a member of the Jewish council and was its chairman in the 1920s, and therefore a leader of the local religious community. He led a small Jewish community throughout the interwar period. In 1939 he tried to flee prior to the war but was probably captured by the Germans. His further fate is not known, p. 36.

Baerwald was born on 7 November 1828 in Nackel a. Netze. Baerwald retired at age 71; according to a letter by Baerwald dated 6 November 1902, when he was age 74, p. 129, at that time he had an older son in Frankfurt am Main who was a gynecologist, two sons who were merchants in New York City, a fourth son who was a lawyer in Frankfurt am Main, and a fifth son who was an apprentice there. His oldest daughter was in Leipzig, married to a lawyer, three daughters who were unmarried, one of whom was a teacher in Frankfurt am Main. He had five grandchildren. This letter by Dr. J. Rabbinowicz, Bezirksrabbiner, responds to a short entry in the previous issue of the periodical, No. 7, 15 February 1907, p. 115, indicating that Dr. Hermann Berwald [sic] died at age 79, presumably in Frankfurt am Main. Baerwald had previously been the Director of the Israelitische Realschule [Jewish High School] and was listed as a philanthropist.

The maternal grandson of Mose Isserles was Rabbi Mose Halevi in Minsk. The son-in-law of physician Salomon in Lublin was married to a daughter of Isaac Spiro, died very old in Lublin 1623. His father, Nathan b. Samson Spiro, rabbi of Grodno, died 1577. Mose of Minsk lived in the second half of the 17th century, p. 5 of the first of the 3 parts. The second generation included his son Meir Halevi, rabbi of 3 districts of Samogitia, and through marriage, related to Saul Wahl. The progenitor of this family were in Juda Minz, died Padua, Italy, age over 100 years in 1509. His son was Abraham Minz, died 1526, and his son-in-law was Meir (Maharam) Padua, died 1565. His son, Samuel Juda Minz Katzenellenbogen, died age 76 in 1597. His son was Saul Wahl. From this same house stemmed Meir Halevi, c. 1670, married to the daughter of Saul Wahl, who died in 1617, p. 6. The third generation included Jecheskel Halevi, son-in-law of Isaac b. Abraham "The Great" rabbi of Lutsk, Grodno (1662), Wilna (1664), and Posen (1667 to his death in 1685). He was related to Abraham Abli. Isaac of Posen's son Jacob married a daughter of Naphtali Cohen and went to Frankfurt am Main in 1714 and then to Posen. His 4 daughters married: Rosel to Menachem Nachum in Plotzk; Malke to Jonathan in Pinsk; Elke to Samuel in Meseritz and Rzezow, grandson of the writer Josua in Krakau; and Rahel to Jecheskel, who was the first rabbi in Flatow, 1691 and who published in Hebrew, previously in Krotoschin in 1689 as successor to Mendel Auerbach who was there until 1670. Jecheskel was a friend of Mose Auerbach, who died in Krotoschin 1739. His son Mendel succeeded Jecheskel as rabbi of Krotoschin, p. 7. The fourth generation: Jecheskel's son Mose Isaac married Mirjam, daughter of Mose Auerbach, p. 8. Jecheskel's daughter married the Dayan (judge) Samuel in Glogau. A son, Jecheskel Schlesinger, died rabbi of Jungbunzlau on 24 Sivan 1821. His son was Meir Halevi Schlesinger of Prague. Another son was Juda Löb Schlesinger, p. 9. Mose Isaac, supra, was rabbi in Leslo (Inowraclaw) and then in Flatow, like his father. He was born in 1685, p. 10. Mose Isaac Halevi, died 1765, when Jacob Uri Schrage Feibel was rabbi, p. 10. Fifth generation: A daughter of Mose Isaac married Baruch Bendit of Obersitzko, died c. 1810. Sixth generation: Baruch's son was Jacob Karger of Obersitzko who married Esther, daughter of Aron of Filehne, who became Assistant Rabbi of Danzig on Shevuos 1808 and married Chaje, p. 12. He died on 7 Av 5598 [29 July 1838], shortly after his mother. His widow died 6 years later on 11 Av 5604 [27 July 1844]. Seventh generation: The son of Jakob and Esther Karger (3 brothers: Aron, Bendit, and Mendel and 4 sisters: Blume, Zirel, Vögele, and Jette, the last still living in 1898), Raphael Itzig Karger was born on 14 Tevet [5580]/1 January 1820. Biernaczyk, Jarosław, "Ostrowianie na berlińskich cmentarzach. Żydowskie nekropolie w stolicy Niemiec"[The people of Ostrowo in the cemeteries in Berlin. The Jewish cemeteries in the capital of Germany], GO, 2 December 2009, No. 48 (1399), pp. 20-21, with photographs of the gravestones of Leo Hirsch and Michael Holzman, and the gravestone of Martin Peltasohn, lacking the identification plate, p. 20. The gravestones of the Landé family and the urn containing the ashes of Berthold Kempiński., p. 21. Photograph of the Weißensee Cemetery main building, pp. 20-21. See the high schools chapter for additional information on all persons listed as graduates of the Ostrów Royal High School. Two Jewish cemeteries in Berlin have graves of persons connected with Ostrów Wielkopolski. The first one in Schönhauser Allee is small, and the second one in Weißensee is vast. The cemetery in Schönhauser Allee is just north of Prenzlauer Berg. It opened in 1827 and was active until 1880, when it was discontinued because of lack of burial space. Thereafter, only funerals for persons with family plots have been buried there among the 23,000 graves. Near the main entrance in the Avenue of the Honored [Ehrenallee] is the grave of Eduard Lasker (1829-1884), eminent German politician and long-time member of the Reichstag. Lasker, born in Jarocin, stayed several times in Ostrów at the home of Jakob Wehlau, Talmudic scholar. Eduard Lasker's tombstone is surmounted by a marble plaque detailing his outstanding contribution to German unity. This plaque was sponsored by Deutsche Bank and is a replica of the original one destroyed by the Nazis. On the eastern wall is the tombstone plaque of Dr. Wilhelm Sklarek (1836-1915), eminent physician and professor at the University of Berlin, born in Raszków, and who graduated from the Ostrów Royal High School. The tombstone of Wolfgang Straßmann (1828-1885) is also in the cemetery. He was born in Raszków and lived in Rawicz. In Berlin he was the chairman of the City Council. Many tombstones, damaged during World War II, have been restored. The tombstone architecture is diverse. Berlin's second Jewish cemetery in Weißensee is 40 hectares in size and is one of the largest Jewish cemeteries in Europe. Founded in 1880, its builder came from Ostrów, Moritz Landé (1829-1888), also the creator of the Ostrów synagogue building. The cemetery can be accessed from Herbert-Braun-Straße and has an enormous diversity of tombstone architecture. Visitors can enter the main building which contains the archives, enabling a search for the location of gravestones with the use of maps of the various sectors. Near the main entrance is the Landé family tomb, where Moritz and his wife, Sophie Landé (1835-1913), are buried. Red marble tables, decorated with laurel crowns and a mosaic depicting the name of "Landé," contain information about those buried there. This tomb, whose portico rests on stately columns, p. 20, is among the most impressive in the Weißensee cemetery. Many other members of the Landé family are buried in the cemetery, including Moritz's brothers, Emil, Jacob, Jacques, Albert, and Joseph. Joseph Landé (1831-1905), born in Ostrów, was a well-known merchant, and later in Berlin was a member of the City Council and was a member of a well-respected company at the forefront of the local Jewish community. [Jacob Landé graduated from the Ostrów Royal High School]. Near the Landé tomb is that of Martin Peltasohn (1849-1912). He was an eminent lawyer, politician, and member of the Reichstag, born in Ostrów, and also graduated from the Royal High School. To find his grave is difficult and one needs to know the tombstone number and sector because the identifying plate with its inscription has been torn from the gravestone, perhaps by the Nazis. In the oldest part of the cemetery are the graves of two persons from Ostrów, Samuel Guttmann (1839-1893), from Ostrów and a graduate of Royal High School there, and of Eduard Jacobson (1834-1897) [listed as Jacobsohn], a dramatist who was the author of many plays in the Berlin Bohemian style, extremely popular in the second half of the nineteenth century. He was also a graduate of the Royal High School. In the southern part of the cemetery wall is the final resting place of the Straßmann family, originally from Raszków. Two members were lawyer Hugo Straßmann (1859-1930) and physician Arnold (1861-1940), both graduates of the Royal High School in Ostrów [with the spelling of Strassmann in both cases]. See Biernaczyk's article about Arnold Straßmann under Raschkow. Further in the interior of the cemetery is the tomb of Michael Holzman (1841-1929). Born in Ostrów, he was an outstanding teacher and scholar of Indo-European and Semitic studies and made major contributions to the development of Jewish education in Berlin. His gravestone states that he was head of a school and teaching seminary for boys. Near Holzman's grave is that of the Kempinski brothers, Berthold and Moritz, originally from Raszków. They founded what is today the "Kempinski-Hotels," a chain of luxury hotels in Germany. The central section of the tomb is in a high semi-circular shape and contains a sculptured Greek urn. It was funded by the Berlin city government with the inscription, "The Tomb of Honor." The Kempinski family tomb is one of the most magnificent in that cemetery. Further from the oldest part of the cemetery is the modest tombstone of Leo Hirsch (1903-1943). He was born in Ostrów and became a writer and journalist in Berlin. His profile appears in the second volume of Studia Iudaica Ostroviensia, q. v., under Biernaczyk, this heading. Hirsch's family, having moved to Israel, has inscribed the gravestone in Hebrew. Within sight of his grave is that of Ephraim Marcus (1837-1926), born in Ostrów and a member of a merchant family. According to the archives, near the end of the eastern wall of the cemetery should be the grave of Carl Pinn (1861-1941), graduate of the Royal High School in Ostrów, and a writer and a translator. Perhaps the stone never existed. Pinn died during the war, and the grave could have been destroyed, p. 21.

The privilege of 26 September 1724 gave the Jews the right to build the erect the first cemetery and synagogue in Ostrów. It was connected to a prayer house and functioned from 1724-1780. On 7 September 1780 Prince Michał Hieronim Radziwiłł ordered the Jews to purchase land within two weeks for a new cemetery on the outskirts of town and 28 September 1780 was set as the date by which the old cemetery must be closed. The first burials in the new cemetery on the outskirts of town occurred in October 1780. The cemetery was extended in 1824 and again in 1905, and in 1873 a burial chapel was built within its grounds. The new cemetery functioned until 1940. The Nazis liquidated it in 1942 using forced laborers, making it into an gardening center which functioned until the end of the 1960s. Only fragments of the tombstones have been recovered, except for 3 whole tombstones, pp. 289-291/p. 299. The city purchased the synagogue on 15 March 2006 and committed itself to set up two lapidariums, one each at the site where each cemetery used to be. In each case, the city has erected a lapidarium although a planned cairn of broken tombstones has yet to be erected at the site of the new cemetery, pp. 293-298/pp. 300-301.

community in their Aus Vergangenheit und Gegenwart der Juden und der jüdischen Gemeinden in den Posener Landen, q. v., under POSEN PROVINCE AND VICINITY, p. 307/p. 313. The author provides a large number of population statistics for the region throughout the article. One migrant, Izaak Bernstein, born Schildberg 1824, into a poor family, left home at age 13 for Ostrowo to continue his education. He was in the grain trade in 1848 and lost all of his money, whereupon he went to the United States, returning in 1859 to settle in Berlin and wrote his memoirs, currently available at the Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, ME 56, pp. 310-311 and p. 311, n. 18/p. 317 and p. 317, n. 18. On 29 September 1885, Elias Plessner became the rabbi of Ostrowo, following the death of his predecessor, Israel Meir Freimann on 21 August 1884. Plessner was born Berlin 10 February 1841, son of a famous preacher, Salomon Plessner, p. 311/p. 317. He had been rabbi in Rogasen from 1873 and remained rabbi of Ostrowo for 10 years, p. 311/p. 318. Other prominent members of the family included Heimann Krauskopf, a member of the Ostrów city council in the 19th century; Jakob Krauskopf who worked in local government in the 20th century; and Isidor Krauskopf, a graduate of the Royal Catholic High School in Ostrowo, who graduated in 1862 and was later a physician in Wiesbaden. See the high schools chapter, showing that he was born in Ostrowo on 19 February 1843, the son of a merchant. Joseph Krauskopf was born Ostrów 12 January 1858, the younger son of lumber merchant Hirsch Krauskopf. His older brother, Manasseh lived in the United States, and at age 14 Joseph went to the United States to be with his older brother. However, the two brothers never met because Manasseh had been killed a few days before Joseph arrived. Joseph lived in Fall River, MA, with a cousin. He was accepted at Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, OH, soon after it opened, receiving his Bachelor of Arts there in 1883 and his Ph.D. in theology there in 1886. In 1896-1897 he operated the National Farm School in Doylestown, PA, free of charge for boys of all denominations. he wished to educate girls as well but did not have enough funds for separate dormitories.. Part 1], GO, No. 35 (974), 31 August 2005, p. 20, with photographs of the Ostrowo synagogue and of the Berlin gravestones of Sophie and Moritz Landé. In Geschichte der Familie Landé, Berlin, 1935, Walter Landé claimed that the family were Levites from Spain or Portugal and who arrived in Poland in the 18th century. The name may have originated in the town of Landau in the Palatinate. The first representative of the family in Ostrów, Jakob ben Jicchak Halewi Lande, arrived in 1773 (or 1770) to become Ostrów's first rabbi. His wife Vogele was the daughter of Samuel Cohen. She died in July 1780 and was buried in the Ostrów Jewish cemetery. Jakob was a son of Rabbi Issak Halewi, who died on Wednesday, 25 Tammuz 5547/11 July 1787 and had three children, sons Hirsch and Moses, and daughter Tirza. Moses Landé had four sons and two daughters (daughters' names unknown). One daughter married in Łódź and the other in Częstochowa. Of the sons, only Löbel Landé, 1777/1778-1869, remained in Ostrów, while Jakob, 1791-1863, a merchant, moved first to Wrocław and then to Berlin; son Salomon, also a merchant, lived in Krotoszyn, and son Dawid, 1786-1858, lived in Kalisz, then Łódź, and finally in Warsaw. Löbel Landé, merchant, married Blume Zuckermann, 1792-1869, of Ostrów. He was naturalized in Ostrów. [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 50, as was Salomon.] The couple had 14 children in all, 4 of whom died in childhood while 5 sons and 5 daughters survived to adulthood. Of the sons, two are known, Moritz Landé, 1829-1888, and Joseph Landé, 1831-1905, a merchant in Ostrów and later in Berlin. Moritz was an architect and engineer. He married Sophie and both are buried in Berlin-

Part 2], GO, No. 39 (982), Wednesday, 28 September 2005, p. 22, with photographs of a tower of the Ostrów synagogue and of the entrance to Berlin-Weissensee Jewish cemetery. Dawid Landé, a grandson of the first rabbi of Ostrów, was born there in 1786. Dawid's father Mojżesz was a merchant in Ostrów. In 1810 Dawid moved to Kalisz and in 1817 married Ernestyna Mamelak, a daughter of a Kalisz merchant. They had 6 sons and 5 daughters. One of Dawid's sons was Samuel, a cotton factory owner. The factory opened in 1862, operated by Samuel and closed due to the economic crisis of the 1850s and 1860s. Dawid died in 1858. Dawid's nephew Moritz Landé was born 1829 in Ostrów, son of Löbel and Blume Landé. Moritz was in Wrocław and met his future wife in Bierutów/Bernstadt, Lower Silesia, in the region of Oleśnica. Moritz' wife, Sophie Block, was born in 1835, and they married in 1857. In 1856 the Jewish community decided to build a new synagogue, and the first stone was set on 7 April 1857. At the time, the rabbi was Aron Stössel and attended the ceremony of the laying of the stone. Moritz died in 1888 and his wife Sophie in 1913, both being buried in the Jewish cemetery in Berlin-Weissensee. This article was reprinted in Szkice Koźmińskie, Koźmin: Urząd Miasta i Gminy Koźmin, Towarzystwo Miłośników Koźmina Wielkopolskiego, No. 37, 2006, pp. 70-75, with bibliography, p. 75, and photogarph of Rabbi Aron Hepner, p. 70, and of Aron Heppner and his wife Selma, née Goldmann, p. 71. At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957; location: A 42/5; and at Biblioteka im. Adama Mickiewicza, Poznań, 295096 II. Eisig Hepner was born c. 1700 and settled in Jaraczew, near Jarocin, in the mid-18th century. The Heppner family lived there for 3 generations. In the 19th century the family moved to Żerkow, the birthplace of Pessach (Paul) Heppner, Aron's father. [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 35, Eisig Heppner, tradesman.] Pessach moved to Pleszew, where Aron was born 22 July 1865. Family lore indicates that the family earlier used the name Baecker, reflecting the family profession of baker, which the family, including Aron's father performed for generations. Aron's mother Riecka, came from Kobylin. Pessach was a member of the council of the Pleszew Jewish community, and until his death in 1912 was head of the Chebra Kadischa. Moshe Gallert was one of Aron's first teachers of Talmud in the Jewish school, while Rabbi Silberberg prepared Aron for high school by teaching him Greek and Latin. In 1881 Aron entered the Royal High School in Ostrów and continued his theological studies at the home of the local rabbi, Dr. Israel Meir Freimann. Aron graduated from the Royal High School in 1885, where he knew Otto Landsberg, future German Justice Minister, and the Goldmann brothers, George and Max, whose sister was Selma. [See high schools chapter for Heppner, Landsberg, and Max Goldmann]. In Summer 1890 he was selected as rabbi of Koźmin Wielkopolski and married Selma Goldman in Ostrów. Several months later they moved to Koźmin, where they remained for 30 years. There were 450 Jews in Koźmin at that time. In 1891 their son Ernst was born, succeeded by 7 daughters, p. 22. In October 1920 the family moved to Wrocław, where his wife died on 19 October 1923. Elkan Weiss, Heppner's cousin lived in Wrocław at that time. Ernst Heppner moved from Hamburg to Palestine in 1934. Otti Heppner, one of 3 unmarried daughters worked with her father in an archive. On 10 November 1938 the Gestapo arrested two of Heppner's sons-in-law, Ernst Boehm and Otto Marcus. Aron Heppner died on 3 December 1938, and both he and is wife are buried in the Wrocław Jewish cemetery, p. 23. See next entry. See also <http://pl.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aron_Heppner>. Adama Mickiewicza, Poznań, 295096 II. He was born Aron Pessach (Paul) Heppner, 22 July 1865 [in Pleszew] and descended from Eisig Hepner, born 1700. In the 18th century the family was in Jarocin and Jaraszewo and in the 19th century it was in Żerków. The Jews constituted 20% of the population of Koźmin, p. 70. His mother was Riccka Baecker of Kobylin. The family later lived in Pleszew, where Aron studied Torah under Moshe Gellert. [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., for Gellert, Salomon, of Kobylin, tavernkeeper/bartender, p. 27.] Aron's father died in 1912. He then was educated in Pleszew under Dr. Silberberg. In 1881 Aron went to Ostrów, where he studied under Dr Israel Meir Freimann, p. 71. Heppner graduated high school in 1885. There were about 450 Jewish in Koźmin in the 19th century. The leader of the Jewish community at the time was named Schneider and the cantor was Jospe, p. 72. Heppner had a son Ernst and 7 daughters. Herman Tuch of Koźmin is mentioned as well as Isaak Herzberg of Bydgoszcz, p. 73. In 1906 he became the rabbi in Koźmin and later in Jarocin and Jaraczewo. He married Selma Goldmann in August 1915. In October 1920 he moved to Wrocław. His wife died on 19 October 1923, p. 74. His son Ernst was rabbi in Hamburg and went to Palestine in 1934. Aron Heppner died 3 December 1938. He is buried next to his wife in Wrocław. The grave indicates that he was rabbi of Koźmin, 1890-1920. His obituary appeared on Friday, 23 December 1938 in the Jüdische Nachrichtenblatt [Berlin—for the URL, see entry under Koźmin for Marcus, Otto]. In 1965 Otto Marcus published a brochure on Aron Heppner [Marcus, Otto, Rabbiner Dr. Aron Heppner...: Eine Biographie, Natania, 1965, q. v. under Pleschen/Pleszew], p. 75. Gulczyński, Andrzej, "Jedność i różnorodność" [Unity and diversity], RP 2010, Pleszew: Miasto i Gmina Pleszew, 2011, pp. 151-158. At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957; location: 42/5; and <http://www.pleszew.pl/servlet/rocznikipleszewskie/rocznik_pleszewski_2010.pdf>. With respect to Hugo Leichtentritt, Jews have lived in Pleszew and borne this surname at least as early as the first half of the nineteenth century. During the cholera epidemic of 1831 one of the relief stations was organized in the house of the Jew Leichtentritt. Later, more people arrived in Pleszew with this surname. Hugo is descended from a merchant of Miłosław, Elias Leichtentritt, who on 1 March 1838 received a naturalization patent. In the family were 4 children: daughter Erstine (born 1840) and three sons: Bernhard (born 1841), Gerson (born 1843), Heinrich (born 1846). This information is based upon Witkowski, Rafał, "Wykaz rodzin żydowskich zamieszkujących w Pleszewie ok. 1848 r." [A list of Jewish families living in Pleszew around 1848], RP 2011, Pleszew: Urząd Miasta i Gminy Pleszew, 2012. Online in full-text at <http://www.pleszew.pl/servlet/rocznikipleszewskie/rocznik_pleszewski_2011.pdf>, which observes that a second Leichtentritt family, that of Hirsch Leichtentritt, who was born in 1794 in Miłosław, also lived in Pleszew. Perhaps it is in his home during cholera epidemic that the treatment station was located, p. 153, and p. 153, n. 4. It was the son Gerson who married Caroline Frances Wachs (Wax), and it was their son Hugo, who became a musicologist and composer. Gerson Leichtentritt owned at least two parcels of real estate in town at the corner of Kaliski and Krzyż streets, a factory and a shop, later owned by S. Bendlewicz, p. 153 and p. 153, n. 5. Hugo Leichtentritt was born on 1 January 1874 in Pleszew, and later attended school in Ostrów. He later studied in the United States, where in 1894 he received a bachelor's degree from Harvard University, p. 153, in Cambridge, MA, p. 154. He died on 13 November 1951 in Cambridge, Massachusetts, p. 154, per Dahlig, Peter, Encyklopedia Muzyczna PWM, Warsaw, 1997, including bibliographies. Vol. 5, pp. 315-316. Another Jew from Pleszew, Walter Lande, 1889-1938, after studying in Freiburg im Breisgau, Geneva, and Berlin, worked in the German Ministry of Education, and lectured at the University of Berlin on the local higher education policy and administration. In 1933 he was expelled from the service and in 1937 he immigrated to the U.S. The author believes that he (was, therefore, of Jewish origin. accepted Jews, p. 18; Jews were permitted by the Prussians to settle in the city from 1823. there were 900 Jews in Pleszew in 1831 and 721 in 1837. By 1910, there were only 292 Jews in Pleszew. They usually held 3 of the 5 positions in the city administration and 5 of the 12 seats on the city council. Relations between Poles and Jews were not good, and between 1846 and 1848 the Jews met with repression. In response they often were spies and informers for the Prussians, citing his own article, "Zydzi ppleszewscy w powstanie 1848," Orędonik pleszewski, Pleszew, 21 May 1938, Vol. 1, No. 50, pp. 1-2 . Many of the Jews were merchants. Their numbes decreased after 1920, p. 22.

The author claims that Jewish testimony identifies spies and informers agaubst the Poles in the 1848 uprising, mostly merchants, innkeepers, and millers: Bromberger, Loebel Sternberg, Jakub Sosnowski, Eisig Cohn, Wierman Cohn, Leiba Żerkowski [perhpas the widow of Jacob; see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 97], Mojżesz Menke, Salomon Karmiński [Luft, p. 44], Marek Cohn [perhaps, Cohn, Marcus, in Luft, p. 17], Szmul Sperling, Jakub Kurzezunge (merchant in Pleszew), Aron Joseph (innkeeper in Wesołowa) [Luft, p. 41], Samuel Philip (miller in Marszewa) and many others. These accusations are bsased mainly upon the testimony of two Jews, Izrael Michelsohn and Aron Windmüller [other Windmüllers in Pleschen, p. 94].

A general review of the history of the Jews of Pleszew in the 19th and early 20th centuries but with some discussion of earlier periods. Illustration of a page from a list of Jewish families living in Pleszew around 1848, held at the Jewish Historical Institute Archives, Warsaw, Poland, p. 177. As a result of the Prussian annexation of Great Poland in 1793 and the changes in law introduced by the Prussians, the conditions of Jewish existence changed. Among the first Jews to settle in Pleszew was Marcus Ollendorf, born Rawicz 1784. He operated the Hotel Prinz Heinrich. The Archives of the Jewish Historical Institute in Warsaw holds a list of Jewish families living in Pleszew [fond: Prow. Pozn. 48], c. 1848. with the earliest listing there being of Joseph Lewczyk, born in Pleszew 1777. Footnote 5 indicates that a full edition of the list is in preparation, along with other materials relating to the Jewish community in Pleszew, stored in those Archives (fond: Prow. Pozn. 49: Correspondence with authorities, lists of school authorities and other writings on education, 1834-1838). the article also discusses holdings in other archives in western Poland and in the Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, p. 178, including the book, Palgon, Gary Mitchell, The Aber, Cohn, Ku4rzezunge, Sperling and Weiss Families of Pleschen, Rawitsch and Zerkow, Prussia, q. v., in the chapter on "Landsmanshaftn and Other United States Manuscript Sources." The article also discusses resources on Polish Jews in the Central Archives for the History of the Jewish People, Jerusalem, and has illustrations of the notice of cemetery rules for Pleszew and a gravestone from the regional museum, p. 179. The footnotes extensively detail available literature, including Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 182, n. 18. The author also points out on p. 184, n. 25, that Mycielski, Józef, Księga adresowa wszystkich miejscowości w Wielkim Księstwie Poznańskiem [See chapter on List of City Directories], lists on pp. 28-29 of his book every town in the Grand Duchy of Posen with a Jewish congregation. In the interwar years, there was a local government election in Pleszew in which Joachim Zarek was elected to the city council on the basis of ethnic lists. When he was unable to accept the position due to illness, Alfred Peyser was selected as his successor. However, the latter did not accept the position because he was about to move to Germany. Ultimately, Dawid Schmul or Schmuel was selected, with 2 books cited as sources. Rabbi Bernhard Koenigsberger, 1867-1927, along with Rabbi Silberberg, wrote numerous publications detailed on p. 185. In 1901 Ahron Marcus (1843-1916), publisher of Jeschurun, published works in Pleszew, such as Der Chassidismus: Eine kulturgeschichtliche Studie. [See 4BM 256 FT MEADE.] The village of Pleszew was home to several eminent scholar-rabbis. Samuel Moses Zuckermandel, born 24 April 1836 in Uherský Brod, Moravia, was rabbi in Pleszew after training in rabbinical college and in 1898 became a lecturer in the Mora-Leipziger Foundation in Wrocław, where he died on 27 January 1917. Eliahu Guttmacher, 1795-1874, a student of Rabbi Akiva Eger, was one of the few sympathizers with Hasidism in Posen Province. He was recognized by contemporaries as the tzaddik, and presided over six Jewish communities from Pleszew, and later from Grodzisk Wielkopolski. He worked with Rabbi Zvi Hirsch Kalischer of Toruń, p. 185. Aron Heppner, rabbi and co-author of Aus Vergangenheit und Gegenwart der Juden und der jüdischen Gemeinder in der Posener Länder [sic, correctly "Landen"], from Koźmin, died 23 December 1938. Discussion of the synagogue building, p. 186. Two postcards, showing the exterior and interior of the synagogue of Pleszew, p. 187. German version of the Pleszew Jewish cemetery regulations, p. 188; and Polish version, p. 189.

Biblioteka im. Adama Mickiewicza, Poznań, 1214893 II. The article contains two lists of Jewish families (Both lists are by house number, not in alphabetical order.), the first being a list of 68 Jewish families, compiled in 1852, and indicating the names of the parents, the profession of the parents, the names of the children, and the ages of the latter, pp. 196-201. This list was compiled to assess which children would attend the Evangelical-Jewish school in Pleschen. A second list from 1848 of 72 Jewish families lists the names of all members of the household, the parents' profession, the places of birth of all of the members of the household (some by implication) and the dates of birth of many of them, pp. 203-213.

For a list of vital records for the city, see Records of the City of Poznan - File population census / 1870-1931 / at <http://e-kartoteka.net>. This website contains images of the residence registration index cards from the city of Posen/Poznań. The date range for these cards is given as 1870-1931. The cards list all the members of a family and give birth dates and places, and sometimes the names of parents. Moves, both within Posen/Poznań and from/to the city are noted. These cards are supposed to be in alphabetical order although that is not always the case. However, this order is generally based on the Polish spelling of a particular name: ALEKSANDR, instead of ALEXANDER, RAJCH instead of REICH. To find the Polish spelling of a name of interest, do a Soundex search in the Family Finder or at JRI-Poland and see what spellings come up under Poland. If the name in question is an unusual one, search on one that starts the same way. The cards are cataloged in groups of 500 to 1000 images each. Some cards have info on both sides. The website offers many and excellent images but is not particularly user-friendly, especially for those who do not know much Polish. The collection, Poznań Archive 474: Records of the City of Posen, is cataloged on the site in such a way to make it nearly impossible to find what one wants among the 26,000+ items, all of which are listed although some of them may not yet be online. Part of the collection available is at <http://szukajwarchiwach.pl/53/474/0/19.3/str/1/100#tabJednostki>. the alphabetical list of those groups. That page and the next 10 link to a summary page for each group; click on any column in the row you want. The last 3 pages are reserved for S through Z. From there, click on "Digital Copies" to the right of the red arrow with the call number in it, resulting in display of a page of 15 thumbnails. That page size can be set to display as many as 100 thumbnails. Click on one of them to see a medium-sized image. Page through to find an item of interest. The image display has a feature for an enlarged version in a separate window.

Arthur Kronthal was born Poznań 25 November 1859 into a wealthy Jewish family of furniture manufacturers for three generations. His grandfather, Simon, 1798-1892, from Leszno, spent almost all of his life spent in Poznań [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 48], having opened a haberdasher's shop in the Old Market Square in 1826. The shop, Simon Kronthal & Sons, later sold furniture as well. The furniture was produced in two factories, one in Poznań and the other in Rawicz, with a total of 250 employees. Simon was Orthodox and was naturalized under the Decree of 1 June 1833. He was the father of a daughter Amalie, and two sons, the elder being Wolf, the father of Arthur, and the younger being Gustav. In addition to business, the family was socially conscious, generous, and loyal to family members in need of funds. Wolf Kronthal, 1827-1894, was a city councilor from 1875-1885 and a member of municipal government from 1885-1891. He was one of the major funders of the Library Association for Young Merchants, and helped orphan Jewish boys, p. 173. Gustav Kronthal, born 1830, was married to Maria Kantorowicz, and helped the Jewish community build and manage the Rohr Hospital and the facility for orphaned girls, Ritsche Flatau Foundation. He created the Städtische Gustav Kronthal Foundation in 1903 which funded acquisitions by the National Museum in Poznań. Wolf and Gustav Kronthal were primarily industrialists, the daughter of the family had links to Jewish intellectuals. Arthur sisters were: Ida, wife of health adviser Dr. Arnold Lissa; Wanda, wife of privy counselor Dr. Leopold Perl; and Marta, wife of Josef Manheimer, a solicitor. Brother Arthur's brother was health adviser Dr. Karl Kronthal; his cousin was health adviser Dr. Paul Kronthal, a son of Gustav. His sister Anna was the wife of Paul Joseph Jaffé, lawyer, later the wife of legal adviser Dr. Wilhelm Roth. Arthur married Marta Lissner. The furniture factory of Simon Kronthal & Sons was founded in 1826. Simon first handed the management of the factory to Wolf, his elder son, and from 1864 it was managed by his younger son, Gustav. Arthur managed the family interests from 1880, and then after 26 years he retired on health grounds. Julius Hirschfeld (perhaps the Arthur's cousin who died about 1903-1904 had management of the company from 1876. After the resignation of Arthur Kronthal, a long-time staff member, then a shareholder, Siegfried Buck took over in 1906. When he died in 1910, the company dissolved. A large number of Poznań Jewish intellectuals are mentioned on the page, p. 175. Arthur Kronthal had been a city councilman and patron of the arts. Without money, sick, and elderly, his home was located Schmargendorf in the southwestern part of Berlin. It is not known what happened to his daughters, who may have managed to escape from Germany, p. 181. Wolf Kronthal was born 19 November 1827, died 30 June 1894, his wife and mother of Arthur was Paulina née Heilbronn, born 8 March 1832, died 16 December 1903. Gustav, born 29 November 1830, on 27 September 1898 he moved permanently to Berlin (Registry file, the State Archive in Poznań, Poznań City Records 14 677), p. 182, n. 5. Julius Hirschfeld was born Neustadt [bei Pinne ? See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 37] 27 July 1844, and became a merchant. Siegfried Buck was born Rawicz 29 January 1861 and died 7 September 1910. His parents were Elias Buck, born Rawitsch 1829 and died 1893, and Rahel [Rachel], née Lissner, born Posen 1831. He was married to married to Ella née Jacobson of Breslau, p. 182, n. 8.

Akiba Eger was buried in the Jewish cemetery of Poznań on 13 Tishri 1837. When reformers convinced the Prussian authorities to ban the teaching of the Talmud in 1825, Akiva Eger asked Solomon Plessner, then a 28-year old teacher, to write a treatise to show the value of teaching the Talmud for matters of faith and morals and thus convinced the authorities to allow resumption of such teaching, p. 275. The new gravestone for Akiba Eger repeats what was on his old gravestone and adds that he had been rabbi in Friedland and in Poznań, dying on Thursday, 13 Tishri 1837 [13 Tishri 5598=12 October 1837], p. 280.

has been found and final arrangements to acquire the site will occur to commemorate him at the site by the end of 2005. Both articles have a reproduction of an engraving of Akiba Eger and note that he was born in 1761 and died in 1837, at which time he was the rabbi of Poznań and of the Grand Duchy of Posen (from 1815-1837), a Talmudic scholar, and author of many religious/legal works. The city edition identifies him as Akiba ben Mosze Eger. The regional edition points out that for his role in the 1831 cholera epidemic, he was commended in a letter signed by Prussian King Friedrich III. It also notes that following his death, he was succeeded by his son Salomon Eger.

His father was the Jewish silkware dealer Arnotld Witkowski, born Posen 1815 and his wife Ernestine, née Krakau, born in Schwerin a. Warthe. [For Krakau, see Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 47.]. They moved from Posen to Berlin in 1853. Richard was the 7th child among a total of 9 children. After finishing high school, he converted to Lutheranism and along with his parents, his siter and most of his brothers later took the surname "Witting" while his younger brother, the editor of the weekly, Die Zukunft, took the name of Maximilian Harden, p. 395. Richard Witting's personality and intelligence was largely responsible for transforming Posen from a provincial backwater to a major metropolis, p. 399.

Arthur Kronthal was born 25 November 1859 and died 1941, the son of a wealthy industrialist family that owned a furniture factory. They had been in Poznań for three generations from the time of Arthur's grandfather, Simon, 1798-1892, who came from Leszno. In 1826 Simon opened a shop in the Old Market in Poznań. He sold a variety of fancy furniture and had factories in Poznań and Rawicz. His children were his daughter Amalie and two sons, the elder being Wolf, the father of Arthur, and Gustav. Wolf Kronthal, who died in 1894, was a city councilor, 1875-1885, and a member of the city government, 1885-1891, responsible for finance, infrastructure and the implementation of science achievements. Wolf was a founder of the Young Merchants Association Library, and gave a donation to the Jewish community for the care of orphaned boys. Gustav Kronthal helped build and manage the Rohr Jewish Hospital and the Ritsche Flatau Foundation care facility for orphaned girls. In 1884 he founded a meteorological installation with scientific instruments on Wilhelmsallee (now al. Marcinkowski). He was also known as a collector of art. In 1889, he left Poznań for Berlin and Dresden. The Gustav Kronthal City Foundation (Gustav-Kronthal Städtische Stiftung) was founded in 1903. It made a donation to the future Emperor Frederick III Museum, now the National Museum of Poznań, of various works of art (paintings, arts and crafts). In 1909 the Foundation donated to the city the Kronthal Fountain, created by the distinguished Berlin sculptor Hugo Lederer. Arthur Kronthal, Wolf's son, attended the Friedrich Wilhelm Gymnasium (now St. John Cantius High School, Strzelecki Street) but graduated education from a high school in Breslau. Later, he briefly studied mechanical engineering in Berlin and also learned carpentry, p. 9, and turnery in the family furniture factory in Rawicz. He married Martha Lissner from his hometown, and they lived in a tenement at Wilhelmplatz 7 (now pl. Wolności), where the ground floor was the Simon Kronthal & Sons furniture store from about 1871. After 26 years in the family business (which he directed from 1880), he became a retiree for reasons of health. In 1910, the company was dissolved. Arthur was a city alderman from 1903-1906, and a member of the city administration from 1906-1918. In 1906 he established his own museum foundation

(Museumsstiftung des Herrn Arthur Kronthal), which supported the Emperor Frederick III Museum by purchases of paintings. He collected Judaica, among which an impressive collection of balsamics (spice containers of fragrant herbs used during the Sabbath closing ceremony) stand out. Arthur was a founder of the boarding school of the Association of Young Merchants, and the Executive Director of the Association for Promoting Arts, Crafts, and Agriculture among the Jews. It granted material for Jewish students, apprentices, and farmers. He was chairman of the Society for the Care of Sick Workers and a co-founder of the Paul von Hindenburg Museum. He belonged to the Cosmos Lodge of the Odd Fellows, which dispensed charity. A company formed by both brothers in 1894 acquired the houses at Linden Str. 9 (now ul. Nowowiejski) for 195,000 marks (The lodge was in its right-wing). For his public service, in 1929 the Historical Society in Poznań (Historisiche Geselleschft) made him an honorary member. Kronthal was a nineteenth-century and early twentieth researcher of Poznań, and his work serves contemporary historians and art historians. He was an amateur having broad general knowledge. He contributed to the Zeitschrift der historischen Gesellschaft für die Provinz Posen, the Historische Monatsblatter für die Provinz Posen, and the more popular Aus dem Posener Lande. The Deutsche wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift für Polen, q. v. under Anonymous, this heading, in 1930 cites him as having published 133 publications, manuscripts and readings, 1888-1930, p. 10. A good deal of this information is repeated in the closing essay, pp. 214-221. Arthur Kronthal did not want to leave Poznań after the end of the First World War, unsuccessfully seeking to remain in Poland but being a furniture factory owner and retiree did not afford him material security in Poland. In 1921 he migrated to Berlin. In 1927 heart disease forced him to abandon most of his activities, p. 11. 1913 Posen city map, showing German street names, pp. 20-21. At he City Hall there are portraits of the following Chairmen of the City Council: (Louis?) Jaffe for the years 1881-1885, Dr. (Joseph) Landsberger, 1901-1902, Dr. Zygmunt [Sigismund] Lewiński [who graduated from the Königliche Marien-Gymnasium zu Posen; see high schools chapter] and (Julius) Salz, 1904-1909, p. 43. There is also a portrait of attorney (Michael) Placzek, chairman of the city council from 1 March 1909, pp. 43-44, and the National Museum in Poznań holds a portrait of Michael Placzek, c. 1920 by an unknown artist, p. 181, n. 114). Żydowska [Jewish] St. previously bore the name "handicraft" bazaar because of flourishing bazaar here. As a result of the great city fire in 1803, the ghetto was renamed from Sukiennicza Street to Żydowska Street; photographs of the interior and exterior of the "New Synagogue;" The rear part of the plot at 16 Żydowska St. was formerly occupied by three synagogues; one of them, the Nehemiah House of Prayer, dates from the late sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The new synagogue was built with Romanesque-style brick, p. 50, in the Moorish style. In 1907 the synagogue community opened the building with a dome designed by the Berlin-based company of Cremer and Wolfenstein, including Prof. G. Riegelmann's plastic ornaments (paintings in the dome). The synagogue stands a little north of the place where the Wroniecka gate was situated, p. 51. The abolition of restrictions on Jews in the middle of 19th century opened access to public educational institutions, which until that time, p. 95, were unavailable to them. Seeing the surge of Jews into the educational institutions, as in the case of the Friedrich Wilhelm Gymnasiu, where the num ber of Jewish students increased from the Summer semester 1847 when it was 97 to 200 in 1851. In the Luisenschule (for girls), its creating document in 1837 had a quota of only 10% of students from Jewish families. In 1846, it had 27 but in 1851 it had 111. Therefore, Minister of Education (Karl Otto von) Raumer declared that there must be a limit to the number of Jewish students, p. 96, of 15% compared to the total number of pupils of the school. Only after the ministerial decree of 5 September 1872 removed the quota for state institutions did the Luisenschule remove the quota. The number of Jewish students receiving instruction at the Luisenschule was 27 in 1846, 107 in 1850, 56 in 1856, and 76 in 1909, p. 97. Photograph of Lord Mayor Richard Witting, [a convert from Judaism], p. 132. Of the numerous monumental buildings in Posen there was the Rohr Jewish hospital, today only a pavilion at ul. Noskowskiego 2, now a private residence, and a nursing home (now the decrepit S. B. Latz Foundation, ul. Żydowska 15/18, p. 161. Photograph of the Jewish hospital of the Abraham Rohr Foundation, p. 162. Gustav Kronthal, born Poznań 1830, came from a wealthy Jewish family and was a merchant, social activist, and collector of works of art. He was the donor in Poznań of a meteorological station and a fountain by Hugo Lederer, both located on al. Marcinkowskiego. In 1903 he created the Städtische Kronthal Gustrav-Stiftung which bought and donated to the National Museum (from 1904 the Kaiser Friedrich Museum) various works of art, p. 182, n. 125. Żydowska street was already called platea Judaica in the fifteenth century although it had previously been called Tkaczy or weaver's street (platea Textorum) or Sukienników or cloth street (platea Pannitextorum), p. 183, n.140. The Poznań Jewish community was established in the 2nd half of the fourteenth century in the area bordered by the following streets: Żydowska, Mokra, and Wroniecka, bounded by the following synagogues: the old synagogue, dating from the fifteenth/sixteenth century, the new synagogue, dating from the beginning of the seventeenth century, and the Nehemiah, on the northern boundary and probably built after the 1717 great fire in the Jewish quarter. It was demolished in 1928. In light of the bad state of the old synagogue complex, demolished in 1908, in 1906-1907 in ul. Stawna the community built a new, monumental synagogue, converted in 1941 to the city swimming pool, and still in still existence. Since 2004, under the restitution law, the building is owned by the Jewish Community, p. 183, n. 141.

—, "Rabbi Akiba Eger: zum 200. Geburtstag," AWJD, Vol. 16, No. 29, 13 October 1961, p. 6. Eger born 1 Marcheshvan 5522 [Thursday, 29 October 1761] in Eisenstadt, Hungary, now Austria]. Last Gaon in Germany. His family line is traced in Encyklopädia Judaica [see Bibliographies ...], Vol. 6, col. 208. His grandfather, the first Akiba Eger, was rabbi in Zülz and Preßburg [now Bratislava], his daughter being the second Akiba Eger's mother. The second Akiba Eger's father was named Guens, and his son was named Jacob. Later, Akiba Eger took his grandfather's name, Akiba ben Simcha Eger and used Akiba Guens-Eger, as well. His uncle, Benjamin Wolf Eger and his stepfather, Chaim Jona Teomim-Fraenkel, taught him in Breslau. Eger married the 19-year-old daughter of Isaak Margolies in Lissa, citing Bleichrode, Abraham Mose, Toledoth [sic] Rabbi Akiba Eger, Berlin, 1862, see citation under this heading, supra. Akiba Eger worked a full decade in Lissa until the great fire of Summer 1790 destroyed 72 houses and killed Eger's stepfather. Eger then went to Rawitsch and in 1814 became rabbi of Posen. Eger came into conflict in 1825 with the liberal Salomo Plessner. Eger worked in Posen through the 1831 cholera epidemic. While 20% of the city was Jewish in 1831, there were only 24 Jewish deaths out of a total of 416 deaths. He attended the 1835 visit of King Friedrich Wilhelm III and was represented in the picture 'Der Marktplatz zu Posen' on one side of the picture along with Jewish community judges Jakob Calvary and Mosche Landsberg/Mosche Lebrons (from Lubraniec). One Salomo Benjamin Latz gave funds for a home for the aged and sick in Posen. Eger died in Posen on 12 October 1837/13 Tischri 5598 and was buried in Posen Jewish Cemetery (photograph of gravestone shown). He married three times and had eight sons and eight daughters. In March 1913 a meeting of the Eger family occurred in Berlin. In Ostrowa [sic], Posen Province, there was a B'nai B'rith Lodge called the Akiba Eger Lodge and a street in Tel Aviv, Israel, bears his name.

—, "Rabbi Akiba Eger," MB, Vol. 29, No. 46, 17 November 1961, p. 6. Born Eisenstadt 8 November 1761 (1 Mar-heshvan 5522) [in the Julian calendar, then in use]. The family tree can be traced back to the 11th century in a chart at the Leo Baeck Institute. Akiba Eger was born Jakob Guens and took the name of his maternal grandfather, Akiba ben Simcha Eger in the form of Akiba Guens-Eger. At age 19 he married the daughter of Isaac Margolies and taught at the yeshiva in Lissa until a fire in the Summer of 1790 when 72 houses were destroyed. In 1814 he became preacher of the Posen Jewish community after a contested election. In the Spring 1831 cholera epidemic which claimed 416 persons but only 24 Jews among them, it was Eger who had a doctor in every prayer room. The city was 20% Jewish. King Friedrich Wilhelm III sent Eger a "cabinet letter" thanking him. The article also mentions Schlomo Plessner, an Orthodox preacher. Under Eger's influence, a rich Jew, Salomo Benjamin Latz gave 6,000 Reichthaler for a Jewish Alten- und Siechenheim, known at Bet Schlomo. Eger died on 12 October 1837 and was buried in the Posen Jewish cemetery. He married three times and had 8 sons and 8 daughters. In Ostrowo there was a B'nai B'rith Eger Lodge. After 1920 there was an Akiba-Eger-Lodge in Berlin since many Poseners moved there. In March 1913 the Eger Family Association was founded in Berlin.

Piasecka, Sława, "Rodzina Flatauów" [The Flatau family], KMP, Poznańscy Żydzi II, 2009, No. 1, pp. 184-197, including bibliography and notes, p. 197, with photographs: Julian Flatau's government identification card from 1 June 1928, showing that he was born in Warsaw 15 March 1870, p. 186; Julian and Fanny Flatau, p. 187; Julian Flatau, p. 188; 9 May 1921 registration showing that Julian had a wife and two children; 5 January 1925 letter showing that Julian was a professor of chemistry, p. 190; Kazimierz Flatau's government identification card from 14 May 1928, showing that he was born Warsaw 11 July 1918, p. 193; photograph of Kazimierz Flatau in 1930, p. 194; 23 July 1945 Poznań Union of Musicians certification that Kazimierz Flatau was a musician, p. 195; 1928 Poznań photograph of Aleksandra Flatau and of her as Aleksandra Flatau-Kowalska in Paris 13 July 1958, p. 196. The Flatau family originally came from Spain. In the nineteenth century, its members settled in Płock and Warsaw and went to Russia. After the Russian Revolution part of the Flatau family settled in Poznań beginning in 11 May 1921. These Poznań Flataus were Julian and Fanny Flatau and their children, Kazimierz and Alexandra, as well as Fanny's mother, Anna Landau, née Levy, and her son, Aleksander Krzysztof, p. 184. On 11 May 1921 Poland issued a permit authorizing the immigration of Julian, his wife Fanny, and their two children, Kazimierz and Aleksandra, on the basis of Julian's ability to contribute to knowledge. A separate permit was issued on 20 June 1921 for Annie Landau. Prof. Kazimierz Flatau died Poznań 2000, p. 185. Prof. Julian Flatau, his wife Fanny, and their children: 10-year-old Kazimierz and 5- year-old Alexandra settled in Warsaw. Julian Flatau was born Płock 1870. His parents were Louis, 1831-1890, and Anna Heymann, died 1888; they were Płock philanthropists, p. 186. They had five children: Edward, Julian, Roman, Henry and Helen. Julian probably spent his childhood in Płock, p. 187. Julian was a professor of chemistry, p. 188. Professor Julian Flatau died suddenly in Poznań 23 May 1935. Fanny Flatau, his wife, was born Odessa 27 January 1880, died Poznań 3 January 1973. Her parents were Anna, born Tauroggen 1858, died Poznań 1942, and Michał Landau, born 1848 and died Ufa, Russia, 1919, one year after leaving his home in Moscow. Their wedding had taken place in Moscow in 1879. Anna did not know Polish; Kazimierz remembered that his grandmother spoke to Michał, his grandfather, in Russian and German. Fanny as one of the few women at the time at the University of St. Petersburg, graduating in law in 1905. In Poznań she provided private lessons and entrusted the education of her son Kazimierz, to a nanny so that his first language was English, then Russian, and Polish was only his third language. Kazimierz learned French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Latin, Arabic, and Hebrew. In 1939 Kazimierz wanted to join the army, but he was not accepted due to his physical condition. During the Second World War someone denounced Kazimierz as a Jew to the Gestapo. Summoned to the Gestapo, Fanny presented documents showing that her deceased husband, Julian. and her son were Lutherans, p. 192. Fanny and Julian's daughter, Alexandra Flatau, sister of Kazimierz, was born Moscow 29 September 1914 and graduated from the university in Poznań in law. She married Gregory Korab-Kowalski, who abandoned the family after the war. She had two sons with him: Mieczysław, born and died 1938, and Krzysztof, born 1939. After that, she decided to work in Warsaw and left at home in Poznań in the care of her mother Fanny and her brother Kazimierz, p. 195. Aleksxandra Flatau died Paris 14 March 1978 and is buried in Montparnasse cemetery, p. 197.

Roden, Günter v., "Dr. Manass Neumark, Rabbiner der Jüdischen Gemeinde Duisburg," Roden, Günter v., Geschichte der Duisburger Juden, Vol. 2, Duisburg: Braun, 1986, pp. 991-1001, with footnotes throughout. DD901.D97 A33 Bd. 34. Since 1905 rabbi and religion teacher in Duisburg, born Posen 19 May 1875, son of merchant Hermann (Hersch or Hirsch) Neumark, himself the son of orthodox rabbi Joseph Neumark. Hermann died when Manass was age 2 years. His parents had opened a clothing store. They had 11 children, of whom 8 survived to beyond infancy. Manass was the 7th child with 3 older sisters, p. 992 and p. 992, n. 2.

The children of Hermann were:

1. Fanny, born 1864. Her mother died Posen 1911 where she kept a store. In 1920 Fanny went to Germany and died 17 August 1938.

2. Netka (=Annette) married David Baruth and lived in Breslau. He died on 4 September 1910 and was buried in Posen. She went to Theresienstadt in 1942 and was later deported to Poland (Auschwitz?). She had 1 daughter who lived in a home for the aged in Israel in 1978.

3. Hulda, twin of Netka, unmarried. In 1920 Hulda went to Germany and moved to Duisburg shortly before the death of her sister-in-law, Martha Neumark, on 24 March 1925. She went to Theresienstadt in 1942.

4. Jacob, eldest brother, twice married but no children. He moved to Breslau in 1920 or 1921 and died there on 3 June 1937. His widow, Frieda, née Lipschitz died on 19 July (20 Tamuz) 1938. They had a clothing store, p. 992.

5. Moritz, accountant. He had been in England and married Ella Landshut in Breslau 21 August 1910. In 1920 he moved to Berlin and died there in 1933. His widow and 2 children migrated to Palestine. His son lived on a kibbutz with his family while his daughter lived in Haifa with her family.

6. David, unmarried. He remained in Poland after 1920 and was deported in 1939 or 1940 and perished.

7. Simon, born 1877, the youngest. He had a watchmaker's store in Posen. He moved to Berlin c. 1920 where he sold watches retail. He married Bertha Haurwitz of Königsberg and fathered 4 children, all married and living in Israel. The fate of Simon and his wife in Germany is unknown, p. 993.

One son of Manass, Ernst (Yisrael), lived in Israel. Manass was deported to Theresienstadt and died there on 21 October 1942; his body was cremated and his ashes scattered, p. 999.

Martha Neumark, born 14 February 1877 married her cousin Manass in Duisburg 1905. She died on 14 November 1924 and was buried in Sternbuschweg cemetery, Duisburg.

They had 4 children, all born in Duisburg:

1. Eva Emma, born 22 September 1907, married to teacher and cantor Emil Frank. She lives with her husband in Kibbutz Kfar Hanassi, Israel.

2. Hermann, born 1 December 1911. He migrated to Palestine in November 1939 and changed his name to Yehoshua Amir, professor in Jerusalem. He married to Margalit Lissauer of Amsterdam, who died Jerusalem 25 November 1983.

3. Ernst (Yisrael), born 26 April 1913, p. 1000. He left Germany in 1934 and arrived in Palestine in 1936, living with his wife Chana Marcuse of Berlin in Kibbutz Hazorea, near Haifa.

4. Ruth, born 30 September 1915. Sailed for Haifa in 1940 but unable to land so diverted to Australia. In 1941 she arrived in Jerusalem, having married Zvi Schaal of Breslau, p. 1001 She teaches in Jerusalem, p. 1001, n. 19.

Notes on p. 37 that the Maharal of Prague was born in Posen about the second decade of the 16th Century of a family originating in Worms, Germany. He migrated but later lived in Posen before going to Prague where he died in 1609. Judah Lowe the Elder was his ancestor. Rosenstein notes that the 1972 edition of the JE cites his birth date as "about 1525" while "many Hebrew sources ... mention dates as early as 1515." Notes on p. 38 that the Maharal's father and grandfather appear to have been buried elsewhere, perhaps in Posen, and that it was in Posen that his uncle Jacob (died 1563) "was the Chief Rabbi of the entire German-Jewish community and where the latter's brother-in-law, the scholar R. Issac Klauber (Klober), maternal grandfather of R. Solomon ben Jehiel Luria (Maharashal, born about 1510, probably in Posen) lived."

He was born on 13 April 1816, or 9 Nisan of the Hebrew calendar, first-born son of Abraham Spitz, merchant, and Ernestine, daughter of Philip Lichtenstine. His parents had married in 1809. Abraham was a partner at the time with his father in Haiman Spitz & Son, commission merchants. Abraham was the paymaster of the Prussian army at Posen from 1814 until 1861, when he was discharged with several medals for bravery as a soldier. Ernestene gave birth to several daughters. Haiman's grandfather died in 1815, p. 3. His father's nephew had been a leader of a student rebellion against the Prussians in 1825, and Abraham was accused of aiding the students, arrested, bailed, and later found innocent. Ernestene gave birth to nine children, three of whom died when Haiman was young and six were living in 1886, three sons and three daughters. In 1832 Haiman's sister Hannah married Bernard Prager. Haiman left school at age 14. His brother Peter, next eldest son, became a furrier, and Julius, the youngest son, studied medicine and later practiced it. In 1834 his second sister Rosa married, p. 4, M. Levy. In June 1835 Haiman left for England and arrived in London in September. In 1836 Peter arrived in London to work with Haiman, p. 5; Peter formed a partnership with M. Marks, cap maker, and emigrated to America. In 1839 the youngest daughter was still unmarried at home with Haiman's parents, p. 6. In July 1840 Haiman left Liverpool for New York on the ship "North Carolina," arriving on 3 August 1840, and met his brother, p. 7. Haiman later became a partner of J. Spiro, born in Posen [see Luft, Naturalized Jews, pp. 87-88], p. 11. After service in the Texas-Mexican War of 1845, located in Boston with his brother Peter to form Spitz & Brother, wholesale and retail clothiers, p. 16. Haiman married on 3 February 1847 in Boston; his wife bore a son Samuel ten months later. The boy died at age 11 months and was buried in Boston in 1848, p. 17. Haiman became a Mason, Odd Fellow, and joined other societies and became a United States citizen in Bangor, Maine, about 1847, p. 18. His wife gave birth to a daughter Annie in Bangor on 7 September 1849, p. 19. On 25 December 1850 his wife gave birth to another daughter, Fannie; Haiman's father died in 1852 at age 71 years, and when Haiman's wife gave birth six weeks later to a son, he was named Abraham Spitz, born 25 October 1852. Other children were son Theodore P., born 3 May 1854; daughter Hannah, born 10 July 1857; son Jacob, born 14 March, p. 21 1858, all six children born in Bangor, Maine, p. 22. In 1863, Haiman's mother died, age 84. In Baltimore in 1866 where the family then lived, Haiman's son Abraham entered the wholesale liquor business, and in 1867 Tade [evidently Theodore] entered the dry-goods business with their father's help. In 1870 A. A. Son became engaged to Haiman's daughter Annie in Baltimore and married her on 13 July 1870, p. 33. Haiman's daughter Fannie became engaged in 1870 to Henry Lyons of St. Louis, probably on 25 December 1870. In 1870 Haiman's sister Lisette died in Boston, age 50 years. Abraham went to San Francisco in February 1870, p. 34.

Dr. Josef Pauly was a physician at the Poznań hospital where Prof. Maks Jaffé also worked as a surgeon, and Otto Lubarsch was an anatomical pathologist. Josef Pauly was born 10 August 1843 in Toszky/Tost, Upper Silesia, the son of physician Zelig Pauly, health officer for the city, who most likely died in 1884, p. 109. His wife, Rosalie, nee Mockrauer, was born on 3 January 1844 in Losnitz (?). The Paulys had eight children: seven daughters—Pauline, Anna, Helen, Elisabeth, Margarethe, Mary and Edith, the youngest was son Wilhelm Adolf. All of the children were born in Poznań between 1870 and 1883. The four daughters married doctors: Pauline to Oskar Pincus, oculist in Poznań; ophthalmologist from Poznań, and Anna, Margarethe, and Helene were wives of doctors in Szczecin: respectively, ophthalmologist and otologist Hermann Rothholz; Adolf Guttentag, gastrologist; and cardiologist Richard Ernst Neisser, p. 114. Pauly's obituary appeared in the Posener Neuste Nachrichten, Posener Tageblatt, and Posener Zeitung, the last of which is reproduced, after he died in Poznań 7 November 1916, p. 115. He was buried in the Poznań Jewish cemetery on 10 November 1916. Four days before the death of Josef Pauly, his younger sister Rosalinde, born Poznań 22 January 1854, died. She was the widow of Max Kantorowicz, 1843-1904, known locally as the wine and liquor manufacturing magnate, p. 116.

The author lists most of the important source works on Akiba Eger's life in footnotes to the text of the Introduction, pp. 3-5, and in footnotes later in the booklet. Akiba Eger was born Eisenstadt 8 November 1761 = 1 Marchesvan [in the Julian calendar 5522 and not in the current calendar], the first son of Mosze and Gittel Guens. He adopted the name of his maternal grandfather, Akiba Eger I and used a German form as Jakob Moses Eiger. The genealogy of that part of the family is explained, p. 7. Akiba Eger I died in Lissa 16 Shvat [5550 =31 January] 1790, p. 10. Akiba Eger II died on 12 October 1837 = 13 Tishri 5598, p. 25. The back cover displays a picture of Akiba Eger's gravestone. The essay is a very good short summary of the facts of the life of the last Gaon of Posen. The summary, in corrected version, is available online at <http://coexist.org.pl/pliki/0014.pdf>.

Remak graduated from the St. Mary Magdalene high school in 1833. Robert Remak was the son of Solomon Meier Remak, a petty merchant and seller of lottery tickets, and was perhaps the grandson of Meier Remak, usher of the synagogue. Robert's mother came from the well-known Caro family, p. 80. He had a daughter, Natalia, and graduated in Berlin as a medical doctor in 1838. One Blondinka with blue eyes was probably the wife of Dr. Jacob Julius Remak, the only physician among the Jews of Poznań listed in the census of adult members of the municipality of Poznań in 1832. In this census there are yet other Remaks: Abraham, trader; Ephraim Moses, factor; Isaak, teacher; Heimann, trader; and Falk, a poor man. [For Remak family members, see Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 75.] It was apparently quite a large family, p. 83.

Gertrude was from Poznań, the daughter of a wealthy pharmacist, Dr. Gustaw Mankiewicz, and was born in 1832. Gustaw managed a pharmacy in Poznań and Berlin. His title was supplier to the court, reflecting his professional reputation. He came from Leszno and moved to Poznań in 1860 where he managed the pharmacy, At the Golden Lion in the Old Market Square. In 1862 in his thirties Gustaw obtained a doctorate in philosophy from Berlin and purchased a pharmacy in the Old Market Square in Poznań. In 1884 he was named "pharmacy judge and pharmacy inspector." The pharmacy sold in 1893 for the large sum of 425 thousand. marks. Oscar Troplowitz [photograph, p. 169] remained in Poznań, where in 1902 he received the title of "medical counselor," p. 167. Jacob Troplowitz's son, Louis, was a master builder and ran a successful construction company. He was married to Agnieszka Mankiewicz, sister of Gustaw, p. 168.

The author's grandfather was Salomon Kaliphari, called Posner, author of Mein Lebensbild im Anschluß an sieben Ahnenbilder, q. v., Landsmanshaftn, Chapter 1. Salomon (harophe—"the doctor" in Sephardic Hebrew) Kaliphari; Salomo, Rabbi of Lentschütz, 1580, and Kraków, and son of Israel Kaliphari, sometime after 1624, was the son-in-law of the physician Juda in Posen. Joseph Landsberg (?) in 1659 was preacher in Posen; in 1696 he retired to study, p. 189. Israel, Salomo, and Joseph were brothers. Joseph's son, Arie Loeb, rabbi of Samter, and then preacher in Posen after his father's death and died a martyr on 18 Kislev 5497 (22 November 1736). His uncle was Moses Landsberg in Posen. Arie Loeb had a son Eliah, who was a student of Rabbi Hirsch in Schwerin an der Warthe, whose daughter Michle he married. Eliah became rabbi of Wreschen and died in 1803, age 93. He had family name of Landsberg. His son, Joseph, was born in Wreschen in 1749 or 1750 and married Gittel Kaliphari. He died in 1825 in Posen shortly before his wife. Joseph Landsberg's son, Salomo, called himself Kaliphari, and also Posner, and was born in Posen in 1778, marrying in 1798, Minde, daughter of Isaak Lasker of Libranitz [sic], of the family of Salomon Lurja (1510-1572) and thus from Raschi (1040-1105). He had 10 girls and boys. Three of his sons became rabbis in Posen, Loslau, and Nikolai. The second was Eliah Landsberg, father of the author's paternal grandmother. Salomo died in his house in 1863. Eliah Landsberg had nine children, including two rabbis, Moritz in Liegnitz, and Wilhelm Landsberg, Bezirksrabbiner in Kaiserslautern. He married Charlotte (died 1796), née Eger, a granddaughter of Akiba Eger (1761-1837), from the marriage of an Eger child with Glückschen, née Margulies (died 1796). Arnold Strassmann was born in Raszkow although his family came from Borek Wielkopolski. Arnold's father, Hermann, 1833-1911, was a teacher and merchant settling in Raszkow in the second half of 19th century. For more than 20 years, Hermann Strassmann was one of the leaders of Jewish community there. In 1886 he moved to Berlin where he lived until his death. Hermann had two sons born in Raszkow: Hugo, born 1859, and Arnold, born 1861. Both went to high school in Ostrów. Hugo passed his high school exams in 1876 while Arnold did so in 1879. [For the graduation of both, see the high schools chapter, under Royal Catholic High School at Ostrowo.] Both later studied in Berlin. Hugo studied the law, while Arnold studied medicine. In 1895 Hugo was the main speaker during the reunion of high school alumni in Ostrów. Arnold was a doctor and a writer. In 1930 he wrote for the Posener Heimatblätter [See under Raschkow, Makowski, Krzysztof, where Straßmann is credited with writing "Verlorenes Land: Reiseeindrücke aus Posen," Vol. 4, No 10, July 1930, pp. 77-79; No. 11, August 1930, pp. 85-87; and No. 12, September 1930, pp. 93-95], but mostly wrote his memoirs in periodic publications; in 1932 he published his memoirs as a book, entitled Allerlei Ostmärkisches; Geschichten u. Geschichtchen aus d. verlorenen Heimat, published in Leipzig: Engel, 1932. In his memoirs he mentions: coachman Hanke who distributed beer, merchant Kube; clocksmith Mende; and blacksmith Liebich. He mentions his friend from high school, Joseph Cohen, and county secretary/treasurer Dopke who was responsible for accepting tuition payments for high school in Ostrów. It is possible that the author could have changed the names of people in his memoirs.

—, "Arnold Straßmann (1861-1940): Podróz sentymentalna do Ostrowa i Raszkowa" [Arnold Straßmann (1861-1940): A sentimental journey to Ostrowo and Raschkow], GO, 21 October 2009, No. 42 (1388), p. 19, with a photograph of a painting of Straßmann. GO, No. 5 (1016), Wednesday, 1 February 2006, p. 20, in the "Dodatek Historyczny" [see prior entry], discusses Arnold Straßmann, born in Raszków, and his memories in a book, Allerlei Ostmärkisches: Geschichtchen und Geschichten aus der verlorenen Heimat, Leipzig, 1932, including his childhood and youth, spent in Raszków and Ostrów. In the PH, see Makowski, infra, this heading, Arnold Straßmann set down additional memories in the interwar years. In July, August, and September 1930, Straßmann described the "Verlorenes Land: Reiseeindrucke aus Posen," a journey back to the area of his youth. After he graduated from the Ostrów high school in 1879 [see High Schools chapter], Arnold Straßmann left for Berlin where he studied medicine. Once his studies were completed, he received a doctoral degree and for many years practiced as a doctor at the Falkensee sanatorium, near Berlin. Living in the German capital, Straßmann, after retirement, visited Ostrów and Raszków in 1930. He obtained a visa and attended a general exhibition, visiting Poznań. In Ostrów he visited the old Royal High School, where he graduated fifty years earlier. He also visited one of the local German families, whom he called "patrician" but does not name the family. [Perhaps it was Hirsch or Kurzbach.] Ostrów was a city of young soldiers and office workers, predominantly of ethnic Poles but with a large admixture of Germans and Jews. Fifty years after his youth Ostrów seemed to Straßmann an industrial city and uniformly Polish with only a few minority residents. Dr. Straßmann then visited Raszków, where his family had lived on the corner of the Market Square and Kalisz Street. He visited the local Jewish cemetery. Arnold Straßmann's life is detailed in the book, Strassmann, Wolfgang Paul, Die Strassmanns. Schicksal einer deutsch-jüdischen Familie über zwei Jahrhundert, q. v., under Rawitsch, infra. In 1899, Arnold Straßmann married a German woman, Emilie Bachhausen, and adopted her biological son, Ernst, her first child. In 1900, another son, Reinhard, was born. Although Arnold remained Jewish, both boys were raised as Christians, and both completed law studies. When the Nazis came to power, Reinhard Straßmann, the son of a Jewish father, was deprived of the right to pursue the legal profession and imprisoned in a concentration camp, where he waited for the end of the war. Ernst Straßmann appeared before the judges when, in 1933 he was also threatened with grave danger related to his father's origin. To rescue his adopted son, Dr. Arnold Straßmann made a written statement that he was not the biological father, only the adoptive one. In 1939 Ernst Straßmann was forced to undergo blood tests to confirm who was his biological father. The court's 16 January 1940 decision went in his favor, but one day later, his adoptive father, Dr. Arnold Straßmann, died . He was buried in the Weißensee cemetery, Berlin.

—, "Moritz Kempinski (1835-1910) i Berthold Kempinski (1843-1910). Kupcy-restauratorzy-hotelarze" [Moritz Kempinski (1835-1910) and Berthold Kempinski (1843-1910). Merchants, restaurateurs and hotel owners], GO, No. 34 (1071), 23 August 2006, p. 19, with photographs of Moritz and Berthold Kempinski. The Kempinski family originated in Raszkow. One member of the family, R[afael] Kempinski, was a member of the council of the local Jewish community. His cousins were Moritz and Berthold Kempinski, later founders of a hotel chain. The older brother, Moritz, born Raszkow 1835, moved to Wrocław and opened a company, M. Kempinski & Co., that traded in alcohol, mostly wine. Berthold, born Raszkow 1843, studied at the Royal Catholic High School in Ostrów, but he did not graduate. He worked as a trader and later joined his brother in Wrocław, first as his employee, and later as his partner. In 1872 Berthold moved with his wife Helena to Berlin to open a new wine warehouse. In 1889 the brothers opened a series of restaurants in one building, the largest such enterprise at that time in Berlin, a four-storey building with numerous restaurants. Since Berthold and Helena had no son, their daughter, Frieda, and her husband Richard Unger took over the business. In 1937 Richard Unger and his family emigrated to the United States. Both brothers Kempinski died in 1910, Moritz in Wrocław, Berthold in Berlin, where his grave can be seen at Weißensee cemetery, near the grave of Moritz Lande, the builder of the Ostrów synagogue.

—, "Z dziejów Żydów i Niemców w Raszkowie" [On the history of Jews and Germans in Raszków], pp. 332-343 [On the history of the Jews in Raszków], and pp. 343-349 for the history of the Germans in Raszków, with a bibliography, pp.350-351; see English-language summary, p. 395; Bartoszak, Jan, and Kucharski, Gerard, eds., Raszków na przestrzeni wieków: Praca zbiorowa [Raszków over the centuries: A collective work], Raszków: Urząd Gminy i Miasta Raszków, 2010, 399 pp., including bibliographies at the end of each chapter, and a summary in English covering the entire book, pp. 394-395; there is a photograph of the synagogue in Raszków on the back cover. The first known member of the Jewish Community in Raszkow was the local physician (in 1693). At the end of the 18th century there were 13 Jews in Raszków. At the beginning of the 19th century, the number of Jews in Raszków was a few dozens and by the middle of that century grew to about 300. In 1858 there were 57 Jewish families in Raszków, including those from nearby villages. Raszków had a synagogue and 3 Jewish social help organizations, i. e. the Verein zur Unterstützung hilfloser Knaben (Association for the Support of Young Men), Kranken Verein (Association for Nursing Care) and the Frauen Verein (Association of Women). In 1837 Chairman of the Jewish Community was S. Goldenring. In 1858 Moses Apt became head of the Community, functioning also as cantor and religion teacher. The members of the Community board were then J. M. Goldenring. E. Josefowicz, M. Glogowski and J. Müller. The Jewish Community Council consisted of M. Trieber, R. Kempinski, S. Muller, J. Grünberg, M. Skaller, L. Ossowski, J. Krotoschiner, N. Plotke, and L. Glogowski. Their deputies were H. Müller, E. Hartmann, L. Kempner, and Zerkowski. The names of known rabbis in Raszków in the 19th and early 20th centuries were Abraham Löwysohn, Moses Aron Bach, 1809-1879, Moses Ungar, born 1814, Heimann Wolfsohn and the well-known Hebraist, Menachem Mendel Landau, Raszków 1867-1909, with photograph of Rabbi Aron Moses Bach, page 332. The naturalized Jews in Raszków in 1834 and 1835 were Heymann Blum, tanner; Moses Glogowski, merchant; Joseph Goldbaum, tailor; Joseph Goldenring, trader; Salomon Goldenring, merchant; Hitzig Grünberg, tailor, Meyer Grünberg, butcher; Wolff Grünberg, butcher; Israel Hirschfeld, rabbi; Elias Josefowicz, merchant; Israel Krotoschiner, merchant; Marcus Müller, tanner and leather merchant; Jacob Nathan, butcher; Löbel Ossowski, butcher and distiller; Aron Rasskowski, merchant; Elias Szklarek, potassium producer; Solomon Wertheim, teacher; and Isaak Zerkowski, tailor. Initially, the synagogue was located in a building belonging to Count Skórzewski. In 1868 the Jewish Community purchased the building and demolished it. At the initiative of then President Müller Hirsch, the Jewish Community built a new synagogue. In Raszków Jewish children first attended school in the Catholic school but later a combined Evangelical-Jewish Community school was founded, and the local merchant Hermann Strassmann, 1833-1911, taught the Jewish religion there, also serving as a city councilor. For 20 years he headed the local religious community. Some Jews continued their education at the Royal High School in Ostrów Wlkp. In 1839 the local Jewish wine merchant Goldenring opened a casino for the gentry in his home. In 1905 there were 84 Jews in Raszków but just 2 years later there were only 45 and in 1913 only 30. Moritz Czapski was then the head of the Community. From 1912 the affairs of the Jewish Community of Raszków were controlled from Ostrów Wielkopolski. At that time the following Jews lived in Raszków with their families: Moritz Benjamin, Emil Cohn, Moritz Czapski, Isaak Glogowski, Otto Mielke, and Max and Rosa Itzig. In the interwar period only Otto Mielke, who was a leading dealer in iron and sold groceries, and Max and Rosa Itzig, engaged in petty trade, remained in Raszków. After the German occupation in September 1939, the few remaining Jews were deported to unknown destinations and did not return. The Nazis destroyed the Jewish cemetery in Raszków. The synagogue has survived until modern times but as a dwelling house, page 333. The brothers Moritz Kempinski, 1835-1910, and Berthold Kempinski, 1843-1910, were both born in Raszków. The elder brother moved to Wrocław, where in 1862 he founded “M. Kempinski & Co.” which conducted a wholesale trade in alcohol, especially wine. Berthold initially studied in the Royal High School in Ostrów but with no high school diploma took his apprenticeship with a merchant in Kluczbork merchant and later joined his older brother, becoming the latter’s first employee and later a shareholder in the Wrocław company. In 1872 Berthold Kempinski, together with his wife Helen, on his brother’s recommendation, moved to Berlin, there to open a new wine business. From that moment onward the firm of Kempinski & Co. was more associated with Berlin although Moritz still retained his interests in the Wrocław firm. Berthold Kempinski opened a wine emporium on Friedrichstrasse in Berlin, and rapidly broadened into a wine bar and restaurant. In 1889 Berthold Kempinski opened the largest restaurant then in Berlin on Leipzigerstrasse, with photographs of Moritz and Berthold Kempinski, p. 334. Because Berthold and his wife Helen had no male heirs, the company was acquired by their daughter and son-in-law, Frieda and Richard Unger, pp. 334-335. The company name "Kempinski" remained unchanged. Both brothers Kempinski died in 1910, Moritz in Wrocław, and Berthold in Berlin. The grave of the latter is in Weissensee Cemetery, Berlin. In 1937 Richard Unger and his family were forced to emigrate to the United States. Richard Unger's son Friedrich began to rebuild the company in 1950 after returning from the United States, with a photograph of the grave of Berthold Kempinski in Berlin, page 335. Wilhelm Sklarek, 1836-1915, physician, born Raszków 22 September 1836, was the son of a merchant. He attended high school in Ostrów, where he graduated in 1854 [See high school chapter]. From 1854-1858 he studied medicine at the University of Berlin, graduating on 2 October 1858, with the degree of doctor of medicine and surgery. He worked as a doctor in Krossen, Eckenhagen, and Berlin. He served as a military doctor in the campaigns against Denmark (1864), Austria (1866), and France (1870-1871). In 1868 in Berlin, Sklarek founded the scientific journal, Der Naturforscher, and later the journal, Die naturwissenschaftliche Rundschau, which he edited until 1912. In 1899 he became a professor of medicine. He died in Berlin 9 October 1915. His tomb can be seen at the Schönhauser Allee Jewish cemetery in Berlin. Jacob Trieber, 1853-1927, was the first U. S. Federal judge of Jewish origin in the United States. He was born in Raszków in 1853 into the family of a Jewish merchant. He attended school in Ostrów until at age 13 and went with his parents in 1866 to the United States, initially settling in St. Louis, Missouri, where he continued his education. The Trieber family moved to Helena Phillips County, AR, 2 years later, and Jacob helped in the family business. In 1873 he began to read law as an apprentice to the former Chief Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court, L. Stephenson. Three years later, he began to practice law, with a photograph of the grave of Wilhelm Sklarek and of his wife, Hulda, née Bernstein, in Berlin and a photograph of Jacob Trieber, page 336. In 1882 Trieber was elected to the Helena, AR city council; in 1890 he became the chief commissioner in charge of the Federal census for the State of Arkansas; in 1892 he was elected Phillips County treasurer. In 1897 he was appointed Federal prosecutor for the Eastern District of Arkansas. In 1900 President William McKinley appointed him a federal judge in Arkansas. In the United States Judge Trieber remained an observant Jew and a Freemason, in 1906 being elected Grand Master of the State Grand Lodge of Arkansas for two years. In 1927 the Chief Justice of the United States, Howard Taft, asked Trieber to preside at a complicated trial in New York. Shortly after the trial began, however, Judge Trieber had an accident, leading to his death on 17 September 1927. He was buried in Oakland Cemetery, Little Rock, AR, page 337. Hugo Strassmann, 1859-1930, lawyer and social activist, was born in Raszków into the family of teacher Hermann Strassmann. Hugo attended high school in Ostrów, graduating in 1876 [See high schools chapter]. He then received a doctorate in law in Berlin. In Berlin he led the Society of People from Poznań [Verein der Posener]. In 1895 he spoke to graduates during the ceremony of the 50th anniversary of the Royal High School in Ostrów. He died in Berlin and was buried at Weissensee. Arnold Strassmann, 1861-1940, doctor and author of memoirs, was born in Raszków in 1861 to the family of teacher Hermann Strassmann. He attended high school in Ostrów, where he graduated in 1879 [See high schools chapter]. He then received a doctorate in medicine in Berlin. He first published his memories of Raszków in the magazine Posener Heimatblätter, Berlin, in 1930 [See Makowski, supra, this heading.]. In 1932 he published his memoirs in book form. [See Strassmann, Arnold, Allerlei Ostmärkisches, infra, this heading.] Lazar (Eleazar) Raschkow, 1798-1870, physician and writer active in the Austria and Hungary, was born in Raszków and initially educated in his father's household. His father was a rabbi. He graduated high school in Neisse, Silesia, and studied medicine in Budapest, later becoming a surgeon in the Austrian army. Thereafter, he practiced as a doctor in the town of Mad, Tokaj County, Hungary. He authored literary works and poems. Hermann Josefowicz, attorney, was born Raszków 2 May 1854, the son of a manufacturer in Ostrów. Hermann attended high school in Ostrów, where he graduated in 1872 [See high schools chapter]. He later served as Secretary in the Serbian Ministry of Justice in Belgrade. Also from Raszków were Wilhelm Wolfsohn, co-owner of the Paris banking house, Wolfsohn & Frank; Konrad Trieber, graduate of Wrocław Rabbinical Seminary and professor at the Gymnasium in Frankfurt am Main; Mannheim Glogowski, doctor in Gorlitz [graduated in Ostrów, 1869; see high schools chapter]; Isidor Glogowski, a judge in Giżycko [graduated in Ostrów, 1873; see high schools chapter], Mazuria; and Hermann Zerkowski, economic adviser in Oleśnica and Bytom, both in Silesia, page 338. Arnold Strassmann, 1859-1940, and his memories of Raszków: He lived in a large house in Raszków on the corner of the Market Square. His uncle, named Mende, was a watchmaker in Raszków. The Jews and Poles predominated numerically in Raszków, page 339. Arnold Strassmann attended the Royal High School in nearby Ostrów [graduated 1879; see high schools chapter]. He spent his leisure time with his school friend, Joseph Cohn, the son of an Ostrów merchant. [graduated in Ostrów, 1882; see high schools chapter] Joseph Cohn was a devout Jew who knew Hebrew, page 340. Before publication as a book, Arnold Strassmann published some portions in the interwar period magazine, Posener Heimatblätter, in three consecutive numbers, July, August, and September 1930, in an article entitled "Verlorenes Land. Reiseeindriicke aus Posen." After graduating high school in Ostrów in 1879, Arnold Strassmann went to Berlin for medical studies and received a Ph.D. For many years he practiced as a doctor at the sanatorium in Falkensee near Berlin. He revisited Raszków in 1930 after retirement, page 341. Ostrów was a garrison city with a predominantly Polish population but with a large admixture of Germans and Jews. Dr. Strassmann's family home in Raszków had been on the corner of Market and Kalisz Streets. He visited the local Jewish cemetery, with a portrait of Arnold Strassmann, page 342. Arnold Strassmann's further fate would probably have remained unknown if not a book by Wolfgang Paul Strassmann, Die Strassmanns: Schicksal einer deutsch-jüdischen Familie über zwei Jahrhundert, which appeared in 2006 in Germany [See Strassmann, W[olfgang] Paul, under Rawitsch]. In 1899 Arnold Strassmann married a German woman, Emilie Backhausen, and adopted her two-year-old son Ernst, a child of her first marriage. In 1900 their son Reinhard was born. Although Arnold Strassmann remained a Jew, both boys were schooled in the Christian faith and both finished later legal studies. When the Nazis came to power, Reinhard Strassmann was deprived of his right to practice law and imprisoned in a concentration camp until the end of the war. Ernst Strassmann practiced as a judge. In 1933 he was threatened with serious danger due to his father's origin. To save his adopted son, Dr. Arnold Strassmann submitted a written statement that he was not the biological but the adoptive father. In 1939 Ernst Strassmann were forced to undergo blood tests to confirm who was his biological father. Ultimately, only a 16 January 1940 court decision settled the matter. The following day his adoptive father, Dr. Arnold Strassmann, died. He was buried in the Jewish cemetery in Weissensee, Berlin, page 343. The Jews in Kalisz attended the annual fair in Raszków, page 345. Otto Mielke kept a shop on Jarocin Street, Raszków, page 346.

In 1866, he moved with his family to St. Louis,

Missouri, and continued his schooling. He lived in Helena (Phillips County) and Little Rock (Pulaski County), Arkansas, and was the first Jew to serve as a federal judge in the United States, serving from 1900 to 1927 as judge for the U.S. Circuit Court, Eastern District of Arkansas. He was appointed by President William McKinley. Trieber's interest in civil rights stemmed from what he had seen in Europe as a youth. He later recalled his childhood days in Prussia, remembering how the discrimination against Jews consumed the country. Trieber married Ida Schradski of Peoria, Illinois, January 10, 1882. They had two children, Harry and Bess. The family was affiliated with Congregation Beth El of Helena and, later, Congregation B'nai Israel of Little Rock both Jewish Reform. A Mason for more than fifty years, he was elected Grand Master of the state's Grand Lodge in 1906 and served two years. He died September 17, 1927. Lembke about the families of Kuczynski and Gradenwitz, well-known scientists, writers and artists. Famous members of the family is Jürgen Kuczynski, economic historian, and his sister Ursula, known as Ruth Werner. Otto Gradenwitz was until the 1930s a renowned legal expert, and Peter Gradenwitz, who died several years ago in Tel Aviv, was a music expert. The family contained bankers, merchants, and industrialists. The Berlin banking firm of Louis Kuczynski operated from 1850 and financed the building of railroad lines. His successor and son was Paul Kuczynski. Also in Berlin banking was Jürgen Kuczynski's grandfather, Wilhelm Kuczynski, the founder of a bank. Before Wilhelm Kuczynski was Adolf Gradenwitz. His daughter Bertha married Robert René Kuczynski. They were the parents of Jürgen, Ursula, and his four brothers and sisters. Adolf was the dominant entrepreneur of the Gradenwitz family. The following generation was a victim of the Nazis. The son-in-law and successor to the founder fled to the United States in the middle of 1941, with his wife. Also the sons of Adolf Gradenwitz suffered. Felix shut the firm and building engineer Hermann Gradenwitz lost his work as well. [The Kuczynskis were from Posen while the Gradenwitz family came from Rawitz, i. e. Rawitsch. The talk was based upon what later became Lembke's book, *Die Schwarzen Schafe bei den Gradenwitz und Kuczynski. Zwei Berliner Familien im 19. und 20. Czwojdrak, Dariusz, "Judaica: W pruskim mundurze [Judaica: In Prussian uniform]," IKT, Issue 228, No. 4 for July-August 2004, pp. 22-24. The author states that the 19th century emancipation process began in 1848-1850 and Jews serving in various Prussian wars. He mentions the Jews of Rawicz and cites Cesar David of Bojanowo by name as being among the 44 Jews from the province who fought in the 1864 against Denmark, pp. 23-23. He also mention Meier Miodowska of Bojanowo who fought against Austria and was promoted in 1870 to the rank of corporal. Also from the 1870 war was Abraham Schneidemühl and 3 Jews from Justrosin. He lists the following surnames of Jews who fought in 1870-1871: Kurz, Neustadt, Sender and Ollendorf, as well as Dr. Joseph Goldman, and the brothers Jaffe—Robert, Samuel, and Adolph, sons of the Rawicz banker, Louis Jaffe. Adolph served in 1886 with the rank of sergeant. In each case the author gives the unit of service. Robert died an invalid in 1875. Samuel died in 1897. There was a tablet in the Rawicz synagogue commemorating those Jews from there who served in the various wars. The article lists the following 12 persons from Rawicz who died in war and the source of the information:

Aber, Louis, born Rawicz 11 April 1894, died 12 October 1915 at Nowogrod.

The author also discusses Siegfried Lewin, born 8 January 1984 [sic, ?1894], bank clerk, died Cambrai 25 April 1915; Artur Schwarzschild, born Schlüchtern [Hessen] 1890, synagogue servant, died Tracy, France 6 May 1917; Georg Rakwitz from Jutrosin, died

4 September 1914; Louis Heilbron also known as Görö Mikscho, born Austria 21 January 1890, died 1 April 1915 in a hospital in Rawicz. He goes on to list musician Emil Basinski, formerly of Krotoszyn, domiciled in Rawicz; corporal Jonathan Walter Cohn, son the Rawicz rabbi, and army pharmacist Freidel Szalom Helischkowsky, son of the town cantor, both winners of the Iron Cross, second class in 1915. There is also high school graduate Erich Landsberg of Bojanowo and the following men from Rawicz: Albert Hirsch and Siegbert Water Landsberg. In addition to Helischkowsky and Cohn, Iron Cross winners included Ismar Baron, Georg Bloch, Herbert Cohn, Alfred Hemel and David Rummelsberg. Other medal winner from Rawicz included the banker Georg H. Loewy and junior attorney Moritz Wittenberg and lawyer Paul Israel.

He also lists Fritz Jakubowski of Jutrosin, living in Koźmin, who died 25 September 1915, and from Rawicz Max Michalek, Siegmar Michalek, Richard Bloch, army pharmacist, Fritz Brann, and Hans Landsberg, living in Berlin. He lists Kurt Brann, deputy sergeant, and Ludwik Eckstein, both of Breslau, Ismar Walkowski, son of the cantor, living in Kattowitz, and Adolph Buck and Salomon (Sally) Kunz, non-commissioned officer, living in Silesian Wodzisław [north of Cracow], p. 24.

—, "Sylwetki: Artur Ruppin - ojciec współczesnego Izraela [Silhouettes: Arthur Ruppin - father of contemporary Israel]," IKT, Issue 225, No. 1 for January-February 2004, pp. 24-26. Simon Artur Ruppin was born in Rawicz on 1 March 1876, the son of Rawicz merchant Albert Isaac Ruppin and Cecylia Borek of Poznań. Simon's grandparents, merchant Simon Ruppin and Pauline Brie, were from Rawicz. Artur was the eldest child, his brothers being Siegfried, born 1880, and Moritz, born 1883 and sisters Rosalie, born 1877, Elisabeth, born 1878, Teresa, born 1881, and Julie, born 1885. About 1886 the family, similar to other Jewish families in the area, moved to west, in the case of this family, to Magdeburg. Artur was educated in the Marcus Cohn Jewish school in Rawicz and later in Magdeburg, p. 24. In 1920 he emigrated to Palestine and was active in Jewish issues, including immigration. He died in 1943 in Jerusalem. The author lists a number of Great Poland Jewish Zionists, Cwi [Zwi] Hirsch Kalischer, the grandfather of Zionism; learned man and miracle worker Elijahu Gutmacher from Borek; Poznań lawyer Maks Kollenscher; Professor Hermann Pick of Ostrzeszów as well as David Baneth of Krotoszyn, p. 25. Zwi was born in Warsaw 1770, and died in Rawitsch 1827. Ruppiner probably came from the town of Rypin, near Warsaw. Zwi moved to Rawitsch, c. 1790 and married Riekel Braun, the daughter of Leiser (Elieser) Braun, born 1770, died Rawitsch 1845. [Listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 12.] In Rawitsch he opened a general store or haberdashery on his own or obtained from his father-in-law; he spoke French. His widow shortened the family name to Ruppin. His son, Simon [Listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 78.], Arthur's grandfather, was born in Rawitsch 1797. He taught religion and German at the elementary level. In 1832 he obtained citizenship of the town of Rawitsch. He married Jachel, daughter of Leiser (Elieser) Brie [For Brie, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 12.] and Jittel Guhrauer [For Guhrauer, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 32.], 1768-1840, and after her early death, to her sister Perle (Pauline), Arthur's grandmother, born Rawitsch 1815 , died Lauban 1899. In 1831 Simon stopped teaching and opened a dry goods factory business and operated it with his 14 children. He died of cholera in 1866, leaving his business to his widow. Arthur's father, the 4th child, was born in Rawitsch 20 March 1842 and attended the Jewish elementary school. In 1875 he married Caecilie, née the daughter of merchant Joel (Julius) Borck [For Borck, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 11.] of Posen, born 1854. Arthur was the first child, born in Rawitsch 1 March 1876, p. 29. Arthur's maternal grandfather, Joel (Julius) Borck, born Posen 1822, died 1883, a wealthy Posen merchant, was son of furrier Salomon Jacob Borck [For Borck, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 16.], the name originating from Borck [Borek], near Posen. Arthur had a sister Else and a daughter Carmela. Julius Borck married Rosalie (Rachel) Kalischer, born Lissa 1825, daughter of Selig Kalischer [Listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 42.], born Lissa 1790, died Breslau 1864 and his wife Täubchen, [see infra] born Lissa 1799, died Breslau 1880. Rachel was the granddaughter of Moses Kalischer [also listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 42]. Selig Kalischer actually was Meyer, son of Hirsch of Breslau, and a son-in-law of the learned Kalischer family [It was common for poor, bright Jewish boys to study under rich patrons, marry into the family, and adopt the surname of the wife.], including Jehuda Leib Kalischer at the beginning of the 18th century in Lissa. The family was in Kalisch until the 1649 Chmielnicki massacre. The family also produced Zwi Hirsch Kalischer, rabbi of Thorn, cousin of Arthur's great-grandfather, Selig Kalischer. Arthur's mother was the 5th or 6th child of his grandfather. He and Rosalie had 10 children. After her death he had 4 more children with Amalie Levi (Loewe). She was the daughter of Josef Levi of Heiligenstadt and her sister Täubchen was the wife of Salomon Borck. She was her husband's cousin. Josef Levi was born in Lissa and was cantor and religion teacher in Heiligenstadt as well as father of Ludwig Loewe, member of the Reichstag and of Isidor Loewe, p. 30. It was Ludwig Loewe who founded the Deutsche Waffenfabriken [arms factory]. Arthur's parents did not get along, and his mother went to live with her daughter Ida Berner in Liegnitz. Only one sister of Arthur's father continued to live in Rawitsch, married to the rich goods shipper Prager. [For Prager in Rawicz, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 73.] All of the others died or were in various other locations, including Bromberg and the United States. In 1849 2 of the brothers of Arthur's father went to Australia and some sisters went later from Australia to San Francisco, New York City, and Houston, TX. The brothers and sisters of Arthur's mother lived in Posen, Berlin, Schoensee in West Prussia, Jena and San Francisco. All married Jews, but some of the children converted, p. 31. Arthur's parents married on 22 March 1875, p. 33. Arthur's father was then age 33. Arthur's brothers and sisters were Martha, born 1877; Else, born 1878; Siegfried, born 1880; and Martin, born 1883. Siegfried was circumcised on 24 January 1880. Arthur's grandmother Pauline Ruppin mentioned, p. 33. Some of Arthur's friends in Rawitsch were Georg and Frieda Friedländer, children of a confectioner, p. 35; and Max and Georg Rosenthal, p. 36. [For Rosenthal, see Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 77.] Another friend was named Asch, p. 37. Arthur's uncle was Moritz Mendelsohn, p. 38, a horse dealer and his wife Jettel, née Nürnburg, cousin of Arthur's father. She was 10 years older than her husband, p. 39. In 1885 Arthur started high school, p. 41. The rabbi in Rawitsch was Meyer Bergel and the teacher of religion was Dr. Koref to 1883 and then Dr. Loeb, p. 44. The family left Rawitsch on 28 December 1886, p. 48. Ruppin was born in Rawitsch 1 March 1876, when 1150 Jews lived there, pp. 548, and p. 548, n. 1, citing Posner, A. B., Zur Geschichte der Gemeinde Rawitsch, Jerusalem, 1962. [See Posner, Arthur B., The Annals of the Community of Rawicz, this heading.] In 1871 1165 Jews lived in Rawitsch, in 1880 it was 1123, in 1889 it was 1077, citing Posner, p. 8. In 1920 the number was 75, in 1923, 15. Similar numbers occur in Kohn's Geschichte der jüdischen Gemeinde Rawitsch, q. v., this heading under Cohn, John. Kohn is cited as indicating 190 Jews in 1874, 176 in 1884, p. 548, n. 1. The Ruppin family moved to Magdeburg in 1887, p. 550. Ruppin died on 1 January 1943, p. 584.

Alfred Grotte was an architect, historian and conservator, and author on architectural design , p. 198. He was born Prague [now in the Czech Republic] 1872 into a wealthy family with established roots in the Czech Republic. His family had Czech-German roots traceable back to 1541. His ancestors, included Jakob Hermann Mayer, his great-grandfather who was a member of the Board of Czech Jewish Communities, and was involved in the implementation of reforms to Jewish worship, as well as to the design of Jewish prayer houses. That could not be irrelevant to his offspring, who, after graduation spent time in Vienna with a professional architect. In 1904 he arrived in Poznań to become an architect and designed many important buildings for the local Jewish investment community and eventually the new synagogue, p. 199. In 1919 Alfred Grotte moved to Wrocław, where from the beginning he was engaged in cultural institution activities, especially those under the influence of the Renaissance idea of Jewish revitalization and addressing the presentation of the cultural heritage of Jews, p. 203. In spite of Nazi persecution, Kristallnacht, and the outbreak of the war, Grotte remained in Wrocław, and on 31 August 1942 was deported to Theresienstadt, where he died from exhaustion and illness, p. 205. The article concentrates heavily on analyzing Grotte's architectural style and lists throughout the article his publications on the subject.

From the German version: Straßmann immigrated to the United States with his parents when he was age 11. The following are excerpts from the online German version: Heiman Strassmann born Rawicz 8 May 1797, son of a wealthy trader. In 1719, 12 Jewish families lived in Rawicz but the first rabbi arrived in 1755, and in 1783 the first synagogue was erected for about 200 Jewish families, p. 35. Heiman's father, Schmuhl Molower, in conformity with the April 1797 decree on Jewish surnames for those holding privileges, changed his surname to Strassmann. Heiman had a brother Chune, and the family lived at Judengasse 166. The family had a crest with grapes on it. Schmuhl died about 1825, leaving the family poor. Chune moved to Borek, dressing, speaking, and working like a Polish farmer, p. 36. Heiman, following local Jewish tradition, named his son Wolfgang after Mozart and Goethe, p. 37. Heiman's wife was Judith, 1797-1875, and they married when she was 23 and he was 21. She had 3 sisters and the maiden name of the sisters was Guhrauer. See "Guhrauer" in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 32. The family sold its last textiles in 1852 and gave what was left to the only daughter, Berta, p. 38. Wolfgang, 1821-1885, was imprisoned for 6 weeks and banned from Berlin for his part in the 1848 uprising during the time that he was studying medicine there. He and his brother Samuel were studying at university. This Wolfgang only took his examinations in medicine 6 years later, p. 47. The 5 Rawicz Strassmann brothers married rich Jewish women about 1860 and produced 13 children, 6 sons and 7 daughters. Among the Rawicz brothers were Paul and Fritz. Paul was the eldest son of Heinrich and Louise Levy, and Fritz was the eldest son of Samuel and Flora Levy. The two Levy girls were sisters, daughters of Therese and Joseph Bender Levy, a wealthy paper manufacturer from Birnbaum. See "Lewy, Joseph Bender" in Birnbaum, tradesman, Naturalized Jews..., p. 56. When Heiman, the grandfather died, Fritz was age 23 and Paul was age 15. Paul's son Hellmuth died in France in 1916. The descendants spread to many parts of the world with some parts of the family in Australia changing the name from Rosenberg to Rogers. Fritz, one of his sons, his wife, and a grandson emigrated to the United States, p. 67. Fritz's second son died in Auschwitz. Paul Ferdinand Strassmann was born on 23 October 1866 in Berlin, p. 68. He became engaged to Hedwig Rosenberg on 23 February 1891, when she was age 22 and he was age 24. She was the daughter of attorney and counselor Dr. Anton Rosenberg and Julie Homberger, whose father was a wool and linen wearer in Gießen, p. 70. He had 2 sons, Heiman [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., listed as a tradesman, p. 89.] and Chune [dates of birth and death unknown], both poor due to Napoleon's blockade and Russian tariffs. Five of Schmuhl's grandsons went to Berlin in the 1840s. Their sister Bertha married an official of the court in Lissa and cared for her parents in old age, p. 3. Wolfgang Strassmann moved from Rawicz to Berlin with four brothers. He served 23 years on the Berlin City Council, 1863-1885, including 12 as Chairman, p. 4. Heiman Strassmann, was born Rawicz 8 May 1797, son of a wealthy trader. Heiman was not fully Orthodox but respected, p. 14. Jewish merchants arrived in Rawicz prior to 1648, were expelled at the time of the Chmielnicki massacres, returned, and were expelled again in 1674. The Jewish community was organized before 1698 and received a privilege in 1719 for the 12 Jewish families then there. The first rabbi was Menachem Mendel Gradenwitz, appointed 1755, but the synagogue was not built until 1783. In the 1800s Jews were one-fifth of the Rawicz population, with a total population of 9,000, the third largest town in the Province. Altogether, about 43,000 Jews lived in the Province, about 6% of the total population [no date given], citing Sophia Kemlein's book, Die Posener Juden 1815-1848: Entwicklungsprozesse einer polnischen Judenheit unter preußischer Herrschaft, [q. v., under "Jewish Life in Posen between the First Partition and World War I," pp. 40 and 58, in a footnote. Reb Schmuhl Molower chose Strassmann for his surname, p. 13. He transported goods via Kalisch to White Russian Mohilew and thus his provisional surname. The family lived in Rawicz at Judengasse 166. There was an escutcheon above the entrance showing 2 scouts of Moses returning from Canaan with a large bunch of grapes hanging from a pole across their shoulders. After Schmuhl's death in 1825, the family was poor. Chune became a farmer in Borek [Cf. Strassmann, Elkan, Borek, bartender, Luft, p. 89.] while Heiman lived in Rawicz. In 1821 Heiman named his son Wolfgang in honor of the then living Mozart and Goethe. Heiman failed as a lottery collector. In 1847 he was elected by his fellow citizens to the position of Wahlmann to vote for their representative in the United Prussian Assembly, p. 14. Chune and Heiman each took half of the rent earned on the house, one half being owned by Schaje Zotenberg, scrap dealer, but who often did not pay promptly. Heiman's wife was Judith, 1795-1875. They married when she was 23 years old and he was age 21. Wolfgang was born one year later. Judith had 3 sisters. That family was named Guhrauer and had migrated to Rawicz and Leszno from Guhrau, Silesia, c. 1640. [See Luft, for Guhrauers in Rawicz, Leszno, and one in Sarne, all tradesmen, p. 32.] The family owned the largest store in Rawicz, selling linens, ribbon, gloves, and other luxury goods. Judith's business declined in the 1840s, and she sold her last stock for the dowry of her only daughter Bertha in 1852, p. 15. In Rawicz Jewish boys went to cheder while Jewish girls were not schooled. Wolfgang, born 1821, and Bertha, born 1824, went to Christian schools, p. 16. In 1827 Wolfgang went to the elementary school attached to the teachers college and operated by Hr. Hippauf. Bertha went to the village school of Scyrakowo [?Szkaradowo]. As late as 1833 in the Posen Regierungsbezirk [Administrative District] 26.3% of Jewish children, mostly girls, had no schooling, and of those who went to school, 14.3% attended Christian schools. Samuel Strassmann, born 1826, also attended Hippauf's school, and both he and Wolfgang then attended the Gymnasium [high school] in Lissa, Wolfgang in 1835 and Samuel in 1840. [Samuel is listed as having graduated from the Royal Comenius High School in Lissa in Easter 1847 under the name Straßmann. See high schools chapter. All 3 Straßmann Lissa high school graduates went on to become physicians.] In 1830 that school had 370 students, half Polish, 44% German and 20 [5%] Jewish. By the end of the 1840s one-third were Jewish. Berhhard Strassmann, born 1831, attended the Hebrew elementary school of Rector Kohn [perhaps Israel Cohn, Deputy Rabbi, per Luft, p. 16.] Bernhard became a master mason, having studied at the Building Academy in Berlin, p. 17. Heinrich, the 5th child, was first taught at home and then in Kohn's elementary school from age 12. He entered the Lissa Gymnasium in 1849 at age 14. [He graduated at Easter 1855. See Straßmann in high schools chapter.] After the 1846 harvest failed, the Poles rioted against Jewish traders, who were protected by German troops, p. 18. Heiman died in Berlin 17 November 1881, age 84. He had lived with Judith in Lissa until she died in 1875, having celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in 1868. He then lived with Bertha and her husband, Louis Mayer, a court official, in Lissa. Judith was buried in the Lissa Jewish cemetery, where other Guhrauers were buried for nearly 200 years, p. 19. Heiman was tall and in later life suffered from arterial sclerosis. He was buried in the Jewish cemetery in Berlin-Weissensee in a plot where his name is listed as Heimann Strassmann, born Rawicz 8 May 1797, died 17 November 1881, p. 20. Ferdinand, Wolfgang's youngest brother, left Rawicz in 1851 to attend the Lissa Gymnasium. [He graduated from there in Fall 1857. See high schools chapter.] He was born in 1838 and died in 1931. His nickname was Nante, and he was in Lissa for 5 years with his brother Heinrich. He went to Berlin in 1858. Samuel's father-in-law was Joseph Bender Levy [of Birnbaum. See Luft, p. 56.], and he was later the father-in-law of Heinrich as well. Levy had a paper business. Ferdinand's wife was Margarethe (Gretchen, née Rosenthal) [For Rosenthal in Rawicz, see Luft, p. 77.], 1846-1919, p. 33. Paul Ferdinand was the oldest child of Heinrich Strassmann and Louise Levy, and Fritz was the oldest son of Samuel Strassmann and Flora Levy. The two women were sisters, daughters of Therese and Joseph Bender Levy, wealthy paper maker of Birnbaum, p. 35. Photographs of various Strassmanns, between pp. 34-35. Max Keiler, 1861-1924, married Helene, 11 years younger than he. Both were deaf. He was born in Schwersenz [For Keiler in Schwersenz, etc., see Luft, p. 45.] and buried in Berlin-Weissensee, p. 43. Heinrich parents lived in Rawitsch in 1859, p. 64. One of Chune's sons was Arnold's father Ephraim, merchant and civic leader in Raszkow, p. 155. Ephraim was also known as Eduard. He served on the town council and was in charge of welfare for the poor, p. 202. The original 5 brothers married observant Jewish women, c. 1860, p. 226. The Rawicz Jewish cemetery had been for centuries in the village of Sierakowo [which was in the powiat of Krobia, not the larger town further north, known in German as Zirke]. The Rawicz synagogue was built in 1889, but many Jews left, especially from 1919-1939, p. 227. Of the Jewish cemetery, only broken tombstone remain, p. 228. He died by suicide in the New Yorker Hotel, new York City, in 1939, p. 19. Samotschin discussed and described, pp. 19 and 21*ff*. Ernst Toller's mother was Ida Cohn, and she and her husband had a grain dealing business. Another grain dealer in Samotschin was Julius Seligsohn, whose firm was founded in 1842 or 1843. Isaak Cohn was Ernst's maternal grandfather, p. 26. In the 1870s the number of Jewish children in the Jewish school was 87, p. 28; in 1905, the number was 17 Jewish students, p. 29. Ernst Hugo Toller was born on 1 December 1893. The family came originally from West Prussia. His great-grandfather was from Spain and owned an estate, p. 30, n. 37, quoting Toller's Eine Jugend in Deutschland, GW Band 4, Munich, ^{2}1996, p. 12. Ernst Toller's grandfather lived in Tuchel and was a dealer. Mendel, called Max, was the son of I. Toller and his wife Hanne. Mendel was born in Tuchel in 1856. He was an accomplished scholar and pharmacist. He met his wife Charlotte in Samotschin. Charlotte Cohn, called Ida, was born in Samotschin in 1856. Her father was a merchant and factory owner, Isaak Cohn. He was a city councillor and city benefactor, p. 30. The Cohn family probably came to Samotschin at the end of the 18th century. Neumann Simon Cohn, substitute rabbi of the Jewish community, lived in Chodzież (Kolmar). Many other Cohns lived in the area. Ernst had an uncle who was a lawyer in Bromberg. On 17 July 1888 Max Toller married Isaak Cohn's daughter and lived in the center of the city, p. 31. Ernst was born at 4 p. m. on 1 December, pp. 31-32, the youngest child. His elder brother was Heinrich, born in 1886, and his sister Hertha, born in 1887. Max died in 1911, p. 32, of cancer, p. 44. History of Bromberg recounted, pp. 37-38; Ernst was there in 1905, p. 38. In 1908 Hertha married a merchant named Cohn from Landsberg (Gorzów). Heinrich Toller sold the family property in 1921, and Ernst went to the USA in 1933, p. 46. Ernst's brother-in-law, the husband of Hertha, was Erich Cohn of Samotschin, p. 47. Ernst first married Maria Groß, then Christiane Grautoff, both actresses, p. 48.

Steinkamp, Klaus, "Ein Leben für die Menschlichkeit: Zum 70. Todestag des Humanisten und Dramatikers Ernst Toller," JWW, Vol. 55, 2009, pp. 128-134. The 70th anniversary of Ernst Toller's death occurred on 22 May 2009. In the 1920s he was the best known living dramatist of the German language. He was born on 1 December 1893 in Samotschin in Kolmar Kreis, today Szamocin, Powiat Chodzieski, the youngest of 3 children of the merchant Max Toller and his wife Ida née Cohn. He died a suicide on 22 May 1939 in New York City. Photograph of Ernst Toller about 1937 in the United States, p. 128. As a child he first attended a Jewish school and in 1900 changed to a German-speaking higher private school. From 1906 until the end of the 1913 [in 1914] school year, he attended the Royal High School in Bromberg. [See high schools chapter.] One event that had an effect on Toller was the death of the poor Samotschin cottager, Julius Abraham, who died in the gutter, following an epileptic attack without the help of those passing by. [However the date of death is unstated], p. 129. Max Toller died in 1911. Thereafter, the mother and Ernst Toller's brother continued the business alone. In 1920, the family opted to go to Landsberg/Warthe in Germany, where Toller's married sister lived.. The properties in Samotschin were sold. Ernst Toller enrolled at the University of Grenoble in early 1914 to study law and political science. When war broke out, he immediately returned to Germany and volunteered as a member of the First Bavarian Foot Artillery Regiment in Munich. He voluntarily reported to the Western Front and went to Verdun, p. 130. In May 1916 Toller collapsed physically and mentally, being moved to the convalescent unit in Mainz, and in January 1917 he was declared no long fit as a soldier and returned to study law and philosophy at the University of Munich, pp. 130-131. Photograph of the house where Ernst Toller was born in present day Szamocin. In September 1918 Toller was discharged from the army and went briefly to Landsberg/Warthe to visit his mother. There, he heard of the 8-9 November revolution in Munich and Berlin, and, despite illness went to Munich where a "people's state" was proclaimed in Bavaria. Toller was the Second Vice-Chairman of the Executive Council of the Bavarian, p. 131, Workers, Peasants and Soldiers Council, and thus also a member of the Provisional National Councils of the People's State. Toller is accused, and on 4 May 1919 arrested. Toller was charged with high treason and tried by court-martial in Munich. He was sentenced to the statutory minimum sentence of five years imprisonment. Toller was first interned in Eichstätt in Mittelfranken and then in February 1920 transferred Niederschönenfeld bei Rain am Lech. He was released 15 July 1924 from prison and expelled from Bavaria, p. 132. On the day of the Reichstag fire, 27 February 1933, Ernst Toller went to Switzerland. Toller went from Switzerland to London and from there to exile in New York. In London in May 1935 Toller married Christiane Grautoff, an actress 20 years his junior. His autobiography, Ein Jugend in Deutschland [A Youth in Germany; see second entry under Toller, Ernst, infra, this heading.], appeared in Amsterdam in 1936. The newlyweds traveled extensively throughout the Spanish Civil War zones in Spring 1936. Toller's marriage having failed, and feeling isolated, Toller committed suicide in a New York City hotel room on 22 May 1939. There were 500 mourners at the memorial service on 27 May 1939, but it was not until 10 years after his cremation that his urn was placed in the Ferncliff Mausoleum in New York by an unknown benefactor, p. 133. Jutrosinski was the former director of the Reichenheimische orphanage and died [in Berlin] on 6 December 1909 at age 84. He was born in Sandberg on 12 October 1825. He attended high school in Lissa and went on to further studies on philosophy and history in Breslau in 1847, p. 616. This article first appeared in the Vossische Zeitung of 8 December 1909, with anecdotes contributed by Richard Jutrosinski, the subject's son, p. 616, n. 1. M. Jutrosinski was a colleague of Eduard Lasker. In 1861 Jutrosinski was appointed as a student teacher in the Posen (city) Royal High School and in 1862 was appointed a regular teacher there, but the city government denied the appointment by the school on the grounds that a Jew could not properly instruct history in a Prussian school and sent him for half a year to England. Jutrosinski struggled under various ministers to have his appointment and eventually the case was discussed in the lower house of the Prussian Parliament. In 1868 his appointment was confirmed. He taught in Posen until 1872 when he became director of the orphanage in Berlin, p. 617.

Hermann Makower was born in Santomischel/Santomyśl on 8 March 1830 and died on 1 April 1897, the second child and first son of Samuel Makower, who may have had a brother. The father was Jacob Makower [see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 61, where he is listed as Macower, Jacob of Santomyśl.] whose wife died early. She was Beatrice, née Jolowicz or Jalowicz [perhaps the daughter of either Hirsch or Paul Jalowicz; see Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 40.] Samuel was in Berlin in 1843 and published his medical dissertation in 1856 with his curriculum vitae at the back. Hermann's maternal grandfather was a legal consultant. Samuel was a merchant but preferred to study literature. Hermann's eldest sister was Hannchen. The grandfather was Orthodox, but the father was not. Hermann was a friend of Eduard Lasker in Santomischel at age 8. He went to Berlin at age 9 to live with his mother's brother, p. 282 and p. 282, fn. He studied law in Berlin from 18 October 1848 until 4 October 1851. Makower was the first unbaptized Jewish Assessor (Grundbuchrichter) [real estate judge] in the Berlin city court and thus the first Jewish judge in Germany, p. 284. Hermann had a son, Felix, born 30 November 1863, died 31 January 1933. Hermann married Doris Ball, born Calau 11 June 1840 and died 1 January 1888. She was the daughter of Meyer Ball, who died Grätz 3 August 1786, p. 285 and p. 285, fn. 2. [For Ball, see Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 5.] In June 1872 he stood for election without success in Wirsitz/Bromberg, p. 287. In 1888 he received the Order of the Prussian Red Eagle, 4th class, p. 288. He had one daughter who married. He died suddenly in Berlin 1 April 1897, age 67 and was buried in the Jewish cemetery in Schönhauser Allee, p. 289. Map of the eastern Prussian provinces in the 19th century, p. 58. For early periods only legal emigrants are included, but by the 1850s all emigrants are included in the data used to compile this essay. In selected years the Prussian statistics also included religion. There is a large discrepancy between the statistics reported by the Prussian authorities and those reported by the German ports and in American statistics. The U. S. Immigration Service reported the highest statistics, followed by the German ports, and then the German statistics offices. However, only the Prussian statistics offices included immigration trends on the local level, down to the town level. The essay is based upon Prussian statistics and is thus incomplete and not fully accurate, p. 59. However, Posen data is derived from port data. Citing von Bergmann, Eugen, Zur Geschichte der Entwickelung deutscher, polnischer und jüdischer Bevölkerung in der Provinz Posen seit 1824, [see Jewish Life], the number of Jews in Posen Province rose until the middle of the 19th century but then started to fall. The general increase in the Jewish population was high compared to the population as a whole, and the decrease was due to emigration, p. 74. See page 75, n. 12. Tables 12 and 13 cover the same type of information, but Table 12 covers the Posen administrative district while Table 13 covers the Bromberg administrative district, both with respect to the number of Jews living there from 1819-1873. In both cases, the peak year for Jewish inhabitants was 1845, pp. 75-76. Table 14 shows the relationship between religion and language as an indication of ethnic affiliation in 1905, with 30,296 Jews living in Posen Province. There were more Jews in the Posen administrative district than in the Bromberg administrative district, p. 77. Most Jews spoke German as a result of the effects of emancipation and the desire for assimilation. The Jews emigrated from the Posen area before other groups did so. From 1824-1834 the number of Jews increased, due to immigration, but in 1834 the proportion began to change. Jews continued to migrate into the Province, but from 1834-1871 50,000 Jews emigrated, being about 35,000 from the Posen administrative district and a bit more than 15,000 from the Bromberg administrative district of Posen Province. From 1824-1873 the proportion of emigrants per 100,000 was 1,370 of the total population. In the Posen administrative district, the number was 1,410 per 100,000, p. 78. Table 15 shows emigration from Posen Province and from its two administrative districts for each year from 1883-1886. The religious profile of the emigrants is unknown for other years, p. 79. In Schrimm county, due to its rural nature, the proportion of Jews was small and decreased from the 1830s. The largest number of Jews was recorded in 1837, being 1,622 Jews in the county or 4% of the total population, while the Jewish population in the Province as a whole was almost 7%. In the 1840s, the number started to decrease. In 1858 there were fewer than 1,200 Jews in the county or 2.5% of the total population, while in the Province as a whole it was 5%. In 1885 there were 770 Jews in the county or 1.5% of the total compared with 3% in the Province as a whole. In 1910 there were 210 Jews in the county, or 0.4% of the total population compared with 1.3% of the population of the Province as a whole, p. 87. The Jews in the towns of the Province constituted about 7% of the population while they were about 0.1% of the rural population in 1885, p. 88. The town of Zaniemyśl had a post office, churches, and a synagogue, and each religion had its own elementary school. In 1820 the Jews were 31% of the town population, and the Jewish population then increased. In 1834 there were 600 Jews in the town or about 40% of the population. In the 1840s the number of Jews in the town started to decrease. In 1855 the Jews constituted 27% of the total population, in 1885 they were 10%, and in 1910, they were 2%, p. 100. The Jews were employed in crafts, innkeeping, and trade, p. 101. In the 1850s and 1860s the Jews were the largest group of migrants compared with total migration, 39% compared to 27% for the population as a whole. In the 1870s the number of emigrant Jews declined, and Jews constituted 15% of total emigrants. In the 1850s the Jews were 42% of emigrants to other towns, but this later dropped to 18%, p. 109. Most of the Jewish emigrants went to Schrimm or to Posen and only occasionally to Bromberg administrative district (which happened only in the 1850s) and later went only to Gniezno and Witkowo in the Bromberg administrative district. Emigration to other Prussian provinces began in the 1860s and initially was almost entirely Jews. In 1830 Hermann Makower's [born in Zaniemyśl] parents sent him to school in Berlin. He became an attorney and representative of the local Jewish community there. Makower's father was from Maków in Russian Poland and traveled west alone, arriving in Zaniemyśl to marry because he had heard that the local Jewish advisor had marriageable daughters. He married in Zaniemyśl and initially became a trader but later was more successful as a student of religion. Jews were then immigrating into Posen Province, p. 110. The Jews were very mobile in the period from 1850-1870, p. 111. In the 1890s one of the most desired destinations was Berlin, especially for reasons of trade. For example, in 1889 the merchant Moritz Lippmann emigrated to Berlin with his wife and sons, and baker Süsskind Davidsohn and his wife and 6 children also went there, p. 113. Leopold Lippmann, the son of a merchant [but probably not the son of Moritz Lippmann, supra] is an example of the frequent moves typical of this time. In 1886, at age 10, Leopold moved to Berlin and the next year to Schrimm, then going to Friedland in 1891. The goal was education. In 1847 Ernestine (Esther) Apel received a permit to travel to New York and emigrated that same year, p. 114. David Berne, a homeowner, received similar permission in 1847 but emigrated to the United States several years later [as cited in n. 92, p. 115]. No one else emigrated from Zaniemyśl until 1854 officially, but from 1850-1854 10 Jews left Zaniemyśl via Hamburg, [as noted in n. 93, p. 115, citing p. 93 of Östreich, Cornelia, "Des rauhen Winters ungeachtet—," q. v. under Emigration and Emancipation, supra,] but they might only have been born in Zaniemyśl; it is thus unknown whether they left legally. From 1860-1862 emigration slowed. The first wave of emigrants thereafter was of Jews, mostly being individual emigrants and not families. The largest subgroups of emigrants were young, unmarried, and financially-dependent. Sometimes brothers and sisters emigrated together. Samuel Fabisch, homeowner, emigrated with his 17-year-old son, but both returned after one year. Ryfka Korytowska, a grocery and food trader, emigrated with her 3 children, n. 95. Only one family is known to have emigrated, and most emigrants left without permission. At least some of the emigrants used agents, generally Nathan Charig and Salomon Jacob Auerbach, both of Poznań, n. 95. There was also one person who returned after 2 years. It is possible to trace the chain of one Jewish family's migration, that of the 3 sisters Mausch, daughters of a butcher. Jette, the first one left in 1863, Ida leaving 5 years later, and Sarah leaving the following year, p. 115.

Seelefreed, A. B., "Rev. Dr. Adolph Moses," AJHQ, Vol. 11, 1903, pp. 201-203. Born 3 May 1840 in Kletchevo, Poland, near the Prussian border, son of Rabbi Israel Baruch Moses, a Talmudist, who moved the family to Santomischel. Adolph attended a yeshivah there for 3 years and then went to Schrimm to study, p. 201. In 1870 he went to become rabbi in Montgomery, AL and the following year became rabbi in Mobile, AL, where he remained until 1881. He then became rabbi in Louisville, KY, until his death, pp. 202-203. He helped the blind and became a medical doctor, graduating from the University of Louisville after 1894, p. 203. [He was editor of the weekly Zeitgeist from 1880-1882 in conjunction with his brother Isaac S. Moses.] He died Louisville, KY 7 January 1902, p. 203.

Isaac Bernstein was born Schildberg, 1824, of a poor family and died Berlin 24 June 1893. He was one of 7 children, 3 daughters and 4 sons. His father was a Talmudist and very religious. He left home at age 13 to go to Ostrowo, where he studied under Rabbi Menachem Auerbach [See Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 3]. After one year he went to Krotoschin to study under Rabbi Schmuel Loewy and then went on foot to Posen where he met Schlomo Eger [See Luft, where he is listed as "Eiger, Salomon, p. 21] and studied under Schie Jaffe [See Luft, p. 40]. In Spring 1839 he went to Berlin, p. 1. In Spring 1846 he was with his brother Salomon and his relative Alexander Mendelsohn in Miloslaw, p. 4. Mendelsohn's sister-in-law was born Raziejewska, niece of Ab[raham] Leichtentritt [See Luft, p. 52], to whom she was engaged in 1847. He was a businessman, p. 5. His brother-in-law was Radziewski [See Luft, for Radziejewski, Jacob, p. 74]. Gustav Leichtentritt [See Luft, p. 52] lent him 100 Thaler to buy stock to sell, p. 6. Bernstein's wife died of cholera in Spring 1848 whereupon Bernstein went to Gnesen to visit his friends, Rabbi Dr. Gebhard and Marcus Witkowsky [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., Wittkowski, Marcus, of Miloslaw, p. 94]. Bernstein remarried and fathered two children, p. 8. In September 1853 Bernstein went to Cincinnati, p. 9. He also visited New York City, New Orleans, and other locations, p. 10. He settled in new Bedford, MA and took his brother as a partner, 1853[?]. In the next year his sister married their cousin, K. L. Stone in San Francisco. In Spring 1857 his wife asked him t return home so he sold his business in mid-January 1858, and in February with his child he went by steamer to Hamburg. His brothers Salomon and Elkan had a good business in Hartford, p. 11. Mention of his cousin, Houstin Lange, p. 12. His sister Cilinde married Hr. Loewenthal in Spring 1858 [?], p. 13. He returned to Gnesen, p. 14. At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR6957, location S42/5. The first Jews settled inside Ostrzeszów in the middle of the 19th century. Trade brought the Jews to the Ostrzeszów. area For some considerable period of time Jews were not allowed to live inside the town but traded there from about the 1730s. A few Jews lived in the nearby town of Borek, now an integral part of Ostrzeszów. [There is another Borek, still in existence, in Wielkopolska.] Although we do not know the exact date of the construction of the buildings, the Jewish community erected a synagogue, a mikvah, and school. The first Ostrzeszów synagogue was destroyed in the city fire of 1820, a new synagogue being built in 1822. The Jewish cemetery already existed in the late 18th century. Previously, local Jews were buried in cemeteries in Kępno and Doruchów. Individual Jews (a banker, musician, barber, hair dresser, wig maker) had been recorded in Ostrzeszów about 1680. There was a conflict in the year 1800 between the Christian tailors' guild and Jewish tailors which was resolved when several Jewish tailors were inducted into the guild. There was an influx of Jews into Ostrzeszów after 1815. Some of the Jews then bought wooden houses on the market square in Ostrzeszów and replaced them with brick houses. The article lists in alphabetical order the names of the Jews naturalized in Ostrzeszów, p. 52, as set forth in Luft, Edward David, The Naturalized Jews of the Grand Duchy of Posen in 1834 and 1835, pp. 52-53. This list demonstrates that the Jews of Ostrzeszów at this time lived mainly from trade, services, and handicrafts. Advertisement taken from Tygodnika powiatu ostrzeszowskiego/Kreisblatt des Kreises Schildberg, no. 43, 25 October 1872: "Best Silesian rapeseed cake sold cheaply and held in stock in Kempen by Mr. Jacob Pacyna. Arnold Türk in Schildberg." From 1843-1845, according to Prussian statistical listings, Ostrzeszów had 826 members of the Jewish community. Of these, 108 were listed as naturalized and 48 held certificates of toleration. The Jewish community consisted of 381 persons and their families living inside the city and 445 living in the surrounding villages. The Jewish community was then in debt in the amount of 158 taler. The city synagogue employed a rabbi, a cantor, a ritual butcher, and a beadle. The Jewish community owned a synagogue, a ritual bath, a nursery, a cemetery mortuary and movable assets worth 400 taler. A Jewish school existed from at least 1841. In 1870 73 children attended, taught by one teacher. In 1906 a new school building came into operation, but only 20 pupils attended due to a large emigration from the town. The principal of the school until 1870 was Dr. Bernhard Klempner. The following persons were rabbis in Ostrzeszów, p. 53, during the indicated periods: Isak Levy (†1858), Mosche Aron Bach (1809-1879), Solomon Schreiber, Dr. Ascher (Adolf) Singer (†1889), Marmorstein, Dr. Moses Löb Bamberger, and Dr. Krauss. The following Jewish societies existed in Ostrzeszów: The Chevra Kadisha [to care for the sick and the dead], Tomcheanijim-Armenverein (Poor Relief Society), Frauenverein (Women's Association), Jungfrauenverein (Young Women's Association), and the Verein für Jüdische Geschichte und Literatur (Association of Jewish History and Literature). Among the most famous inhabitants of Ostrzeszów were Jakob Pick (1824-1886), rabbi in Kluczbork, Bojanów and Oborniki; Josef Pick (died Poznań 1914), judge in Krotoszyn; as well as Hermann Pick (1879-1952, Orientalist, who was during 1907-1914 was assistant in the Department of Asia Minor in the museums of Prussia in Berlin. During World War I he was the military censor of the Jewish press in Poland, and later a librarian in the Prussian State Library in Berlin. In 1934 he immigrated to Palestine, and in Jerusalem was, with others, a founder of the bibliography, Kirjath sefer, of the Jewish National Library. Undoubtedly the most prominent Jew from Ostrzeszów was Prof. Dr. Ismar Elbogen (1874-1943), a distinguished historian who worked in Germany, Italy, and the United States. Prof. Elbogen studied at the local University of Wrocław and at the Theological Seminary there. He obtained his doctorate in philosophy with a thesis on Spinoza, and was ordained a rabbi in 1899. In the years 1902-1938 (from 1919 as a professor) he taught in Lehranstalt für die Wissenschaft des Judentums (Higher School for Knowledge about the Jews) in Berlin. In 1938 he managed to immigrate to the United States. He was also an assistant professor at the Collegio Rabbinico Italiano in Florence. After 1933 he was a member of the Reichsvertretung der deutschen Juden (Representation of German Jews in the Reich). He was editor of Jüdisches Lexikon (Lexicon of Jews) and the Encyklopedia Judaica.

Elbogen specialized in publications devoted Jewish liturgy and founded and edited the prestigious Zeitschrift für die Geschichte der Juden in Deutschland in Berlin. The bibliography of his articles includes approximately 400 titles. His son lived in the Netherlands after the war.

Another prominent

Ostrzeszów Jew was Max Jungmann (1875-1970). Jungmann studied medicine from 1895 in Berlin and Freiburg and received a Ph.D. in 1900. He practiced medicine in Berlin. From his youth he was a Zionist, publishing numerous articles on the problems of the Jews, often in the form of satire. He founded the satirical magazine, Der Schlemihl, and co-founded the Verein Jüdischer Studenten (Association of Jewish Students). In 1914 he went to Haifa in what was the British mandated territory of Palestine. After 1948, from the founding of the Jewish state, he remained in Israel, where he supported himself by working as a physician and freelance writer, but his journalism in German did not enjoy a particular attention there. He died at the age of 95 years, p. 54. Most Ostrzeszów Jews emigrated to Germany after World War I; only a few over 100 Jews remained in the town. The community continued to function, supported by contributions from the community, ritual slaughtering, the charges for cemetery plots, and donations made at the time of naming of a child. In 1922 Rabbi Krauss left Ostrzeszów for Miechlowitz, and the previous chairman of the Jewish community performed his functions. The number of Jews in Ostrzeszów continued to decrease. In 1922 members of the following families remained in Ostrzeszów: Ignatz Feibelsohn, H. Heimann, M. Heimann, K. Nathan, G. Grunberg, Paul Seidel, David Altman, M. Armer, Julius Süssmann, and Bilski. At that time among the local Jews had a political party, "Poaley Sion." By 1925 the Jewish community consisted of 10 men and 11 women. Most Jews traditionally lived in the suburb of Borek and around the market square. The wealthiest Jew was Julius Süssmann, a horse trader. The rest of the Jews conducted small trade and operated workshops. Occasionally, a rabbi from Kępno, 20 km. to the south visited Ostrzeszów, especially on the occasion of funerals. Farewell announcement from Ostrzeszów Gazette, No. 99, Saturday, 16 December 1922: "As a result of the request of our children that we go to Germany, we wish to send all of our friends, customers, and good neighbors a heartfelt goodbye. Max Heimann and family." After the German occupied the town in 1939, they drafted a list of the Jewish inhabitants, consisting of David and Pauline Altmann; Sophie and Selma Kaiser; Franziska, Willi, and Heinz Michlowitz; Erna, Kurt, and Sophie Seidemann; Salo and Fanny Lamel; Dora Hirschel; Meta and Beate Nathan; Flora Süssmann; Solomon Polatsch; and Cecilie Schonfeld. All were deported in Autumn 1939 to ghettos in the General Government. Prior to the arrival of the Germans five Jews in one family left the town. They were Joseph and Regina Bolkowsky and their daughters, Adolfia Judyta, Sara Genia, and Judyta, all of who,m perished in the Warsaw Ghetto. It is also known that Paul Süssmann died in the camp at Theresienstadt in the Czech Republic. The Jewish cemetery was leveled after the war, and a nursery was built in its place. The tombstones were partly used to build urban fences. Brick from the cemetery wall was used for the construction of urban objects. The synagogue was demolished in the 1970s while the rabbi's house and the mortuary have survived. In 2008 the remains of tombstones from the Ostrzeszów cemetery were discovered. They are to be used in the construction of a lapidary monument, p. 55. He died Berlin 24 June 1893 in an apartment at Oranienburgerstr. 12, p. 58, n. 1. 1815-1850: Mention of Jakob Pick, later rabbi in Kluczbork, Bojanów and Oborniki and Dayan Josef Pick, a rabbi from Krotoszyn. The Ostrzeszów Jewish Community remained was under the influence of larger and more dynamic community and its rabbinate in Kępno. Nevertheless, rabbis in Ostrzeszów included: Isak Levy, Mosche Aaron Bach, Solomon Schreiber, Dr. Ascher (Adolf) Singer, Marmonstein, Dr. Moses Löb, Dr. Krauss, and others. However, the most illustrious representative of the Diaspora Jewish community from Ostrzeszów, Ismar Elbogen was a German rabbi, theologian of Judaism, lecturer and historian, born 1874. He came from an illustrious Wielkopolska-Silesian family of rabbis. He studied under his uncle in Wrocław, a prominent specialist in lexicography, Jacob Levy. He studied the Talmud under Chaim Bloch and Gedaljaha Tiktin. Ismar Elbogen became a professor and lecturer in German, Italian, and American universities. His contemporary was Leo Baeck, born Leszno 1873. Isaac Bernstein's family lived in Ostrzeszów from the end of the 18th and into the 19th centuries. The Ostrzeszów synagogue was built in 1822, 2 years before Bernstein's birth, p. 60. Akiba Eger (1761-1837), rabbi in Poznań from 1815. Isaac studied under Akiba Eger's son, Solomon, in Poznań, p. 61. Solomon Eger, born Leszno 1787, died, Poznań 1852, son of Akiba Eger, rabbi in Poznań from 1839, was also a merchant and social activist, p. 61, n. 4. Gotthold Rhode wrote about Adolf Warschauer from Kępno and Jacob Caro, born in Gnieźno. In 1848 Bernstein was in Miłosław during the uprising and suffered some property losses, p. 62. See Rhode, Gotthold, Ostdeutsche Biographie—Persönlichkeiten des deutschen historischen Ostens with respect to Jakob Caro, http://www.ostdeutsche-biographie.de/caroja86.htm, p. 62, n. 5. After the uprising Bernstein moved to Gnieźno but lost his entire capital. He left his second wife and children with her family in Gnieźno and emigrated to the United States. As a "bankrupt," Bernstein was not eligible to be naturalized under the 1833 decree. He began as a hawker in New York City and sent home remittances to his family in Gnieźno and to his parents and sister in Ostrzeszów. He moved to New Bedford, Massachusetts, to open a dry goods store. In 1858 he returned to Gnieźno to bring his family to the United States. From 1859 he and his family were in Gnieźno, where his wife died. He married a third wife, the daughter of a local merchant and 12 years younger than he, p. 63. He married Fredericke Pick, 1836-1902 on 14 March 1861 in Gnieźno, p. 63, n.7. Isaac's son, Philipp, wrote memoirs, revised by Isaac's granddaughter, Marietta Berger, née Bernstein, in Aufzeichnungen aus dem Tagebuch meines Vaters Philipp Bernstein, in the archives of the Leo Baeck Institute, Jerusalem, p. 63, n. 8. In 1872 Isaac moved from Gnieźno to Poznań, where he eventually went bankrupt. He then moved the family to Berlin in 1873, where he remained until his death, p. 64. Philipp Bernstein, born Gnieźno, 1862, died Berlin 1917, first son of Isaac's third marriage, p. 64, n. 9. Isaac was born in Schildberg, now Ostrzeszów, in 1824, the son of poor parents and was one of 7 children, 3 daughters and 4 sons. His father was religious and Isaac went to Ostrów at age 13 to study the Talmud with Rabbi Menachem Auerbach. In Ostrów poor students received meals from the rabbi and rich members of the community. However a year later poverty forced him to move to Krotoszyn to study under Rabbi Schmuel Loewy, p. 65. Menachem Auerbach-Mannheim, rabbi of Ostrów, born Leszno 1773, died Ostrów 1849, p. 65, n.11. In Poznań he was welcomed by Rabbi Schlomo Eger and fed by Schie Jaffe [See Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 40] while a student. In the Spring of 1839 he went to Berlin where he was accepted by Rabbi Chone Rosenstein among other rabbis, p. 66. Elhanan Rosenstein, rabbi in Berlin, born Chodzież 1796, died Berlin 14 January 1869, p. 66, n. 14. Mention of Isaac's brother Solomon and his relative Alexander Mendelssohn, both from Miłosław; Isaac traveled there in the Spring of 1846. Just 8 days after his arrival, he became engaged to Mendelssohn's sister-in-law, née Radziewska [Cf. Radziewski, Jacob, in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 74] , the niece of Ab. Leichtentritt [See Abraham Simon Leichtentritt, in Luft, p. 52]. He was married at Pentecost [c. 31 May 1846] and set up in business, dealing in materials, tobacco, and grain, p. 67. Isaac's stock was ruined as a result of the 1848 revolutions and he and his family were in danger. After hiding with a friend, he went to Poznań, where the family stay with in-law m. Radziewski and his cousin Gustav Leichtentritt [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 52]. His first wife died of cholera in Autumn 1848. On the advice of his friends, Rabbi Dr. Gebhard and Marcus Witkowski [See Wittkowski, Marcus, in Luft, p. 94], Isaac moved to Gnieźno and resumed sales but lost his whole fortune and decided to go to America, leaving his second wife and children behind. He set out in August 1852 for Hamburg and sailed in mid-September. The journey lasted 44 days and cost 28 dollars for the cheapest berth. In New York City he visited his brother who had immigrated a year earlier, p.70. Isaac went to see a friend from his youth, Morris Anhalt from Ostrów, in Elmira, New York. he sent money home to his parents and went to Cincinnati in September 1853 and then went to Savannah, Georgia, where he became a countryside peddler until mid-May ? 1854], when he returned to Elmira. At the beginning of August he went on a buying trip to New York City. From mid-September he traded in New Orleans, fleeing the following end of April to escape the oncoming yellow fever. He bought supplies in New York City and went to Elmira , hearing of the death of his mother. He then went to peddle in New Orleans, p. 71. The following Spring his father died so he sent money and steamer tickets to his sister Goldchen to bring his child to America. Isaac was then selling in New Bedford, Massachusetts, with his brother Solomon as business partner. His sister and child landed in New York City in early August.. The following year his sister married their cousin, K. L. Stone of San Francisco. In Autumn 1857 his wife wrote that her brother Samuel had married and that she and her children could no longer live where they were. Isaac sold his business in mid-January 1858 and sailed with his eldest child on a steamer to Hamburg. K. Jacusiel [Cf. Moses Lewin Jacussiel of Gnesen, in Luft, p. 40] acquired his business and he, his wife, and her youngest sister Cilinde decided to immigrate to the United States. Dr. Jacusiel recommended the trip for health reasons. Isaacs's brothers Solomon and Elkan, residing in Hartford, Connecticut, rented a dwelling from 1 June. Isaac sold his business interest to H. Reimann and set off a week before Shavous. Via Berlin, the family went to Hamburg and then second class from Southampton to new York. They were met by Salomon and Elkan and their wives. They also visited their cousin, Houstin Lange. he told them that Isaac's eldest brother Nelson who emigrated to the United States 30 years earlier and settled in Remond, Mississippi, was living for 2 years in, p. 72, New York City. Isaac met his brother, his wife, and eldest daughter, age 19, and the eldest son, age 22. That Autumn, Isaac's sister Echude married Isaac's neighbor, named Loewenthal. Also, in Hartford were Isaac's brother, his wife, and 4 children. Isaac's brother Abraham , a missionary teacher from Baltimore visited with his wife. In November Isaac's wife fell ill so they moved to New York City, p. 73. On 20 September 1859, Bernstein and his wife sailed first class from New York City to Southampton. Via London and Hamburg, they went to Gnieźno. The memoir was written in Berlin in 1873, p. 74.

Hartstock, Erhard, "Ein Jude namens Friedländer," Oberlausitzer Hausbuch, Bautzen: Stübner & Co., 1996, pp. 57-60. DD801.L872O34; and at Sächsische Landesbibliothek Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek Dresden, Y.8.5923. Joseph Friedländer, a dealer in old clothes and other old goods was going from Dresden to Schlichtingsheim on 12 May 1813. He was then age 46, having been born in Mühlendorf bei Preßburg (Bratislava), Hungary. His father was a protected Jew there. Joseph started at age 13 as an assistant to a Jewish dealer in Preßburg. At age 20 on a business trip, he met the Jew Samuel of Vilna and worked for him for 8 years, learning Russian at that time. He then worked for the famous merchant house of Markus Prager in Frankfurt on the Oder as an assistant and met his wife, a cook, there. After marriage he went to live with his father-in-law, Joseph Ringel in Schlichtingsheim and lived there for 16 years as a protected Jew. There was a battle near Bautzen on 20 May 1813. At that time he translated for the Russians. After the battle, he went back to his family in Schlichtingsheim. He then returned to his employer in Bautzen, p. 57. He lost his protection in Schlichtingsheim. In 1815 he asked the Saxon king for a letter of protection and permission to sell old clothes and the like. In a rescript dated 10 September 1815, he received such permission for himself and his wife for 2 years. On 25 November 1818 the city authorities ordered him to be expelled by Easter 1819, and the city allowed him to stay in a ruling dated 26 April 1819. On 3 July 1819 the Bautzen Furriers' Guild objected. Schlichtingsheim would not take him back, but only his wife and child. On 22 November 1819 Friedländer renewed his application, p. 58. His physician stated that he suffered from hardening of the liver, shortness of breath, stomach cramps, and indigestion. His wife suffered from nervous excitement as a result of pregnancy. Thus, a trip was dangerous. On 1 November 1819, the Saxon Privy Council sought the views of the high bailiff on the pass issue. On 18 November 1819, Friedländer sent a letter to the king requesting permission to remain. The high bailiff's office replied on 24 March 1820, opposing the permission as a threat to commercial rights of the guild, p. 59, but on 15 March [should read "July"] 1820 the king gave permission for Friedländer to remain for 15 years, so long as Friedländer's conduct gave off offence. In March 1835 the Ministry of Religion asked the County of Budissin how many Jews lived there and if there was a synagogue, how many Jewish children there were, and about their education. The reply was that Salomon, the wool dealer, had departed for Berlin, leaving only Friedländer and his 17-year-old daughter in Bautzen. She attended the Protestant school and received good grades. She also was instructed in Dresden on the Jewish religion and in reading and writing Hebrew. When there were more than 10 Jews visiting Bautzen during the period of the Leipzig Fair, they went to the former home of Salomon in the Müller Beer Court on the Inner Lauen Alley for Jewish services. They had a Torah left by Salomon.

The Friedländers lived in a small garret. In 1837 Saxony granted Jews citizenship. In 1839, Friedländer at age 70 was the only Jew living in Bautzen. His only daughter had shortly before married and moved to Poland, and his wife died about that time. Friedländer's relative, Anna Flaschner, born in Böhmisch Leipa, had permission to care for him for 6 months. In the Summer of 1840 he sought to renew the permission with Marie Fischer from Böhmisch Leipa as servant to nurse him. He received that permission for one year, p. 60.

Under heading "In der sächsischen Oberlausitz zwischen 1815 und 1933," pp. 34-57: In the Summer of 1815 a petition to the Saxon king from Joseph Friedländer [sic] of Schlichtingsheim stated that he wished to remain in Bautzen and deal in old wares, that he was then age 48 and was born in Millendorf bei Preßburg, Hungary [born 1767 Mühlendorf, Hungary; died Bautzen 9 July 1841], where his father was a protected Jew. At age 13 he began as a business assistant and at age 20 met a Jew in Vienna, Samuel of Vilna, , working as his assistant and scribe for 8 years and learned Russian. He then worked for 2 years in the well-known firm of Markus Prager in Frankfurt on the Oder as an assistant, where he met his wife, a cook. He then lived for 16 years as a protected Jew with his father-in-law, Joseph Ringel, in Schlichtingsheim [See Rinkel of Schlichtingsheim, Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 75]. From 12 March 1813 he translated between the Russian troops and the Germans in Weißenberg; the battle near Bautzen occurred on 20 March 1813, p. 36. Prior to 10 September 1815 he sought permission for his wife and himself to remain in Bautzen and received it on that date. In 1819 the Furriers' Guild opposed his petition, but the king granted permission on 15 June 1820 on the condition that Friedländer give no grounds for offense. In 1826 Neuman (Naftali, in Hebrew) Priebatsch [listed in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., as Priebutsch, Neumann, schoolteacher, p. 73], a teacher and head of the Jewish school in Śmigiel, opened a bookstore there. His two sons continued to operate bookstores but in two other places. Iselin Priebatsch opened a bookstore and a publishing house in Ostrów in 1855 while his brother, Leopold Priebatsch, moved to Wrocław in 1861 where he also opened a bookstore and a publishing house. In 1867 Iselin joined Leopold in Wrocław. Leopold died in 1903 and Iselin in 1905. Both were buried in the Jewish cemetery, Ślężna Street, Wrocław. Iselin's son, Felix Priebatsch, born Ostrów 1867, began to work in the family business in 1899, taking it over in 1905. He studied history and wrote numerous publications. From 1910 he was a board member of the Silesian Publishers Association. Felix died Wrocław 17 April 1926 and was buried in the Jewish cemetery, Ślężna Street, Wrocław. After his death, his wife, Gertrude Priebatsch, operated the business, followed by his son, Dr. Hans Priebatsch, born Wrocław 1902. In 1934 the family emigrated to Palestine. Agnes Priebatsch, daughter of Iselin, married Max-Friedrich Holzman, born 1889, from Obornik.

Czwojdrak, Dariusz, "Żydzi w Śmiglu, pp. 83-88, including bibliography, p. 88, MP, 2009, No. 1(6). The first evidence suggesting the presence of Jews in Schmiegel, and indeed in the then Kościan area appears in 1415 with the mention of a garden, named "Judenplatz,"owned by the city. The next mention of the Jews in Schmiegel appears only in a privilege issued 24 February 1671 for local fabric dealers. It prohibited Jews from producing textile products. The privilege also limited their ability to purchase and trade in wool. Photograph of mortuary chapel in Schmiegel, p. 83. We do not know when the first synagogue was built in Schmiegel or when the first rabbi was installed there. However, sometime prior to 1809 Mosche ben David Auerbach came from Leszno to be the first rabbi. Prior to that, he had been a rabbi in the private Reisner Synagogue in Leszno. His successor was Chaim (Joachim) Loeben, from Leszno, who was in Schmiegel from 1810 to 1834. He was followed as rabbi by Mordechai (Marcus), Michael Jaffe from Krotoszyn, who had previously been in Zduny. After leaving Schmiegel, he settled in Hamburg. He had been a teacher of one of the most prominent rabbis in Poznań, Wolf Feilchenfeld, and was the author of several religious works, including Beth Menachem (The House of Menachem) and Meram Jafe. The last Schmiegel rabbi was Salomon Feldblum, from Bydgoszcz. Archival sources indicate that he arrived in 1847 and died in Schmiegel on 25 March 1877. In addition to the rabbis of the community there was also a whole range of officials, including cantors responsible for the order of worship and singing in the synagogue, ritual slaughterers of animals in accordance with the dictates of Jewish law, Jewish religious teachers, collectors taxes and servants. For over 150 years of the history of the Jewish corporation of Schmiegel there were more than 25 employees, among whom is mentioned as the first teacher, Loebel Baron of Łęczyca, recorded in a document dated 1799, p. 84. As a result of the 1833 decree allowing for naturalization of the Jews in Posen, just in the first year of its operation, 44 Jews in Schmiegel received patents. Among them were 19 merchants, 14 tradesmen, 4 craftsmen and 7 ranking officers of the religious community, including Rabbi Marcus Michael Jaffe, teacher of religion Judah Baron, elementary school teacher Neumann Prebatsch, and cantor and religious butcher Jacob Goldstein. Picture of Naumann [sic, ?Neumann] Preibatsch and of the stamp of his lending library, p. 85. Cigar and tobacco factory owner Jacob Struck and a brickyard owner Georg Isaac Bornstein in Czacz [just north of Schmiegel] in the 19th century. Among the Jews of Schmiegel who died in the First World War were Kurt Danziger and Heinrich Warschauer. Dr. Samuel (Siegfried) Freund, son of a local merchant, after graduating from Leszno High School [in 1849; see high schools chapter], studied in the Theological Seminary in Wrocław and then for nearly half a century served as rabbi in Görlitz. Adolf Hepner was a son of a baker and corn merchant. He graduated from the high school in Leszno [not so listed in the high schools chapter], then attended the Theological Seminary in Wrocław, and Berlin University. He studied the German Social Democratic movement. Photographs of broken Jewish gravestones in Schmiegel and of the gravestone of Breine Salmonski, p. 86. Photograph of the stone monuments memorializing the cemetery in Schmiegel and photograph of the gravestone of Jechezkel [Yeheshkel], son of Cendik [Tsendik]. In 1882 Hepner immigrated to the United States, where he was publisher and editor of the journal, St. Louis Daily News, and of the periodical, Western Post. After returning to Germany in 1908, he settled in Munich, where he died in April 1923. He was the author of several books. Noted: Simon Scherbel was a Leszno pediatrician, social worker, poet, and writer; London teacher Heimann Brühl; Trieste doctor Neumann Loewenthal; and Julius Iselin Priebatsch, bookseller and publisher in Wrocław; Mandheim [sic] Herzberg, rabbi in Nauen, Trzciel, Justrosin, Czempin, and Rawicz; and Wilhelm Salomon Freund [1831-1915], lawyer and parliamentarian. The dissolution of the Schmiegel Jewish Community occurred on 16 May 1923. All of its funds were placed under the management of the city authorities. After a process lasting several years, in 1936 the holdings were transferred to the board of the Leszno Jewish Community. The Schmiegel synagogue was demolished in 1937. Only the cemetery remained, which the city was under contract to maintain. The last person buried there was the merchant Julius Jackier, who died 29 June 1937. A few months before the outbreak of World War II only two aging ladies remained in Schmiegel, Teresa Kurzezunge and Sara Jackier. According to notes by the occupying authorities and dated 7 October 1939, p. 87, there lived in Schmiegel only one Jew (S. Jackier), who apparently disappeared suddenly thereafter. No one knows her further fate. Series: Stadt Schneidemühl und Grenzmark Posen-Westpreußen, No. 2. At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957, location S42/5. Until the fire of 1626 Jews and Christians lived together within the city. Sometime thereafter Jews were restricted to the ghetto, p. 1, at the end of Großen Kirchenstraße. In this quarter, a synagogue was erected. After the time of Kaiser Wilhelm I, the location where the synagogue was located was called Wilhelmplatz. Schindelmann, Lesser, and other Jews had their businesses there. In 1762 the Jews numbered 318; in 1774, 312; in 1804, 483; in 1834, 404; in 1837, 688; in 1880, 805; in 1885, 802; in 1890, 798; in 1925, 750 Jews or 2% of the total population. The Jews first had almost all of the wool trade and later the leather trade, p. 2. In 1773 there were 80 Jewish families with 81 men, 79 women, 92 boys, and 64 girls for a total of 316 persons in all. The city had the privilege of carrying on trade as butchers, furriers, and gold lace makers in the period 1772-1773, and cloth and wool could only be sold by Schneidemühl Jews. By another privilege of 17 April 1750, valid until 1812, the number of Jews in the city was limited, p. 3 Jews could elect their own rabbi and trustees. Various later limitations on Jews are listed, culminating in the Edict of 11 March 1813, which naturalized the Jews, required family names and put them on a similar plain with Christians, p. 4. Various family names during the Nazi period are mentioned, pp. 5-10, and p. 12. The "G'milus Chassod" Benevolent Society was founded about 1900 and had 30 members, when there were about 100 members of the synagogue. The synagogue chairman was Alfred levy, the preacher Julius Moses. The Chevra Kadisha was founded in 1874 with Max Abrahamson as chairman and the Israelite Women's Benevolent Society was founded in 1866 with Bianca Leske as chairwoman., p. 18. The Jewish cemetery for Schneidemühl was located in Schivelbein, not far from the city and was destroyed by the Nazis, pp. 22-24. A list of various Jewish merchants in 1933 is provided, pp. 25-26. About 1740 the Jews of Schönlanke built a synagogue, which was destroyed in the fire of 24 June 1779 and a new synagogue was first begun in 1823 in Synagogenstraße between houses 11 and 12. This old synagogue is described in detail as well as the new one whose cornerstone was laid on 18 March 1883. with Rabbi Wäldler presiding, p. 27. The "new" synagogue is described and located next to the old cemetery, closed in 1822. It was destroyed on Reichskristallnacht, p. 28. Entities adjunct to the synagogue, such as the ritual bath, are described, p. 29. Photographs: Schneidemühl synagogue, c. 1900, unnumbered p. 1; the same in 1907, unnumbered pp.2-3; the synagogue on 4 November 1915 and a view from a different perspective, unnumbered pp. 4-5; a drawing of the synagogue in Schneidemühl, unnumbered p. 6; photograph of the building used by Simonstein & Co., unnumbered p. 7; the Schönlanke synagogue, unnumbered p. 10; and its interior, unnumbered p. 11; correspondence with various names of Jews at the time of the Holocaust in Schneidemühl, unnumbered pp. 13-19; additional names of Jews in 1938 in correspondence, unnumbered pp. 23-24; view of the location of the destroyed cemetery, unnumbered p. 27; reproduction of a newspaper article on the Sabersky family and their Holocaust property losses, unnumbered p. 29.

After an introduction, pp. 29-31, the article begins with a short history of the Jews in Poland, pp. 31-33, then in the lands straddling the Notec River, pp. 33-34, and then in Trzcianka, pp. 34-45. Of the Jewish communities established early in Polish history in the region of the Notec River, the oldest was established at Wronki, but in the 16th century, communities were established in Rogoźno, Piła, and Ujście, in the 17th century at Jastrow, Czarnków, Wałcz, Człopa, and Chodzież, and in the 17th or 18th century in Tuczna, Szamocin, and Trzcianka, p. 33. The Jewish community in Trzcianka was established on 10 October 1739 as a result of a royal concession, p. 34. In 1772, at the time of the First Partition, there were 270 Jews who were community members out of a total population of 19,000 and the community had its own synagogue, and cemetery. A new synagogue and school were erected in 1779; the first rabbi of the community was I. Jakoby Koroner and his successor was Joel Mayer Asch, who was appointed on 23 April 1779, p. 35. A list of the presidents of the congregation appears on pp. 35-36, and a list of members of the governing council (each elected for a 3-year period) appears on p. 37, with a list from 1808-1852. In 1823 a new synagogue was built and a lower school in 1827, with a ritual bath (mikva) created in 1846; a new cemetery was created in 1822 at what is now ul. Piotr Skarg and ul. Parkowa, p. 37. In 1833 the community had its own official stamp while the most famous person to originate from Trzcianka was Michael Salomon Alexander, the Church of England bishop of Jerusalem, p. 38. The furniture factory of Adolf Levy and Company, became, after World War II, the Polish Furniture Factory, pp. 38-39, and 41. The same family owned a large shopping mall, p. 39. A new school was built and opened in 1869 as a result of aid from Józef Samuel Cohn, while a new synagogue was erected in 1883 and destroyed on Kristallnacht by the Nazis in 1938. A list of the 3-member council of the Jewish community, 1852-1911, appears on p. 40. There is a photograph of the now-destroyed synagogue, p. 42.

The first synagogue caretaker listed is Salomon Jacob Silberstein, listed in 1847. In 1739 there was no synagogue in Schönlanke. It was built in the following year but burned in the fire of 1779. the next synagogue survived until condemned in 1820. In 1828 a new synagogue was built but was condemned in 1882. In the same place in 1883 on Synagogenstraße the last synagogue was built next to the Lutheran Church. The synagogue remained until destroyed on Reichskristallnacht November 1938. There is also a hand-drawn map of the Schönlanke central square showing the location of the synagogue, the ritual bath, the administrative building, the location of the synagogue servant, the school, and the Beth Hamidrash. The Jewish people's school was founded in 1823 for 200 Jewish children, with the first teacher being Golde, who was succeeded by Salinger in 1826; it moved to be near the synagogue in 1827. From 1867 had 50 students and a falling enrollment. In 1904 the school was taken over by the city and in 1913 with only 10 Jewish children, the students transferred to the Lutheran or Catholic schools, p. 65. Mosche ben Jisrael Isserl Wasserzug of Schokken, alive in 1818, p. 440. Son of a wool merchant and ritual slaughterer; mother from Wronke, p. 441. Later in Grätz as schochet and teacher of small children. Then in Kurnik. He could write Hebrew, German, and Polish. In Kurnik in 1817, there were 774 Jews, 42.8% of the total population. In 1910, there were 100 Jews, 4% of the total population. There was a wooden synagogue. The Jews called Schokken "Skok" and Kurnik was Kornik. The Jews called Wronke (Wronki) "Wronek," Posen "Posna," Obornik "Oiberik," Chodziesen (Kolmar) "Chadseisch" or "Chaseisch," Grätz "Greiditz," and Schroda "Schreid." After Kurnik, Wasserzug went to Plock a. d. Weichsel, which was then Prussian, p. 444. His daughter was Frau Henriette Jacobsohn of Samotschin. Rabbi Baruch Mendel (Menachem) Auerbach of Gollantsch, p. 446. Also separately published by Loewe, Heinrich, ed., dedicated to his father-in-law, Rabbi Baruch Menachem Auerbach in Gollantsch, 26 Elul 5671 [19 September 1911], 6 pp. in German; 28 pp. in Hebrew. At Leo Baeck Institute, CT1098W38M4. Reb Mosche ben Jisrael Isserl Wasserzug, died c. 1818. His great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather were from Schokken, the latter have come as a translator from Plock. Mosche was from a merchant family of Schokken, his mother coming from Wronke, p. 1. He lived in Kurnik as a schochet [ritual slaughterer] from 1793, p. 4. The writer, an orphan, was taken by Baruch Mendel (Menachem) Auerbach as his son-in-law into his home, Loewe belonging to the Kalischer rabbinical family tracing its history back to Joseph Caro. Wasserzug's daughter, Frau Henriette Jacobsohn in Samotschin had the manuscript and gave it to her nephew, who, in turn, gave it to his grandson, Rabbi Baruch Mendel (Menachem) Auerbach, in Gollantsch, who then gave it to Loewe, p. 6.

In 1789, a description of Śrem's Jews stated: "The Jewish synagogue behind the market square is surrounded by 50 homes, many in need of repair. The community maintained the synagogue and houses for the rabbi, the cantor, the school, and a home for their poor, with 6 places lying empty." On 5 March 1790 the Śrem Jew, tailor Markus Pyskal, who was born about 30 years earlier, was baptized in the Catholic Church and now was thereafter called Kazimierz Jozef N. In the eighteenth century many Polish Jews were baptized, p. 25. 1968 photograph, just prior to demolition, of the Śrem synagogue, built 1836-1838, and the location as it appeared in 2008, p. 27. In 1845 there were 196 children in the Jewish school, with Solomon Goltmann as teacher; he was also head of the Jewish Community in Śrem until his death. In 1849 there were 1,166 Jews in Śrem, 29.1% of the total population. They had the right of residence and thus also merchant rights and craft rights. They owned 55 houses. The names of Jewish families included Abraham, Becher, Diesntag, Fuss, Hamburger, Kempner, Landsberg, Mittwoch, Reissner. In the second half of the nineteenth century many Jews became Germanized, especially the more affluent, p. 28. Hermann Schreiber was born in 1882 and graduated high school in 1901, p. 29. While some sources indicate that in 1905 there were 593 Jews in Śrem, others indicate the number was 396 or 7% of the total population. Schoolteachers included Georg Hopp and Miss Mittwoch in 1905 with 51 students, but in 1907 there were only 19 students in the Jewish school. In 1905 merchants Breslauer and Jaffe were part of the city government and retired Dr. Ehrlich was a member of the city council while Citron was a municipal judge, and Messrs. Fuss and Unger were members of municipal authorities. Unger operated a hotel and wine bar in Śrem. In each of the following towns the Jewish population and percentage of the total population is: Dolsk, 14 (1%); Kórnik, 111 (5%); Mosina, 106 (6%); and Ksiąz, 67 (7%), pp. 29-30. The inside front cover displays a c. 1910 postcard of the main street in Śrem, where most of the shops belonged to Jews. Between c. 1750-1863, the Jews of Śrem constituted more than ¼ of the inhabitants, p. 5. Due to the diminished number of attendees, the synagogue in Dolsk was closed in 1902; there were only 14 Jews in Dolsk in 1905, while in Książ in 1905 there were 67 Jews but only 14 remained in 1918. Of 26 Jewish boys in Śrem in 1939, only two survived the war and shortly after returning to Śrem in 1945, left for unknown destinations, p. 8. Jews may have been in Śrem since 1253, although the surviving sources do not corroborate this. Moreover, the inhabitants of Śrem believe that Jews lived there from 1323. In any case, the Jews lived in Śrem for more than six hundred years, p. 10. the high point of the number of Jewish inhabitants was in the period 1835-1860, when their numbers rose to 30% of the total population of the town. pp. 10-11. In 1847 there were 1,166 Jews in Śrem. Especially after 1850 their share in the total population constantly decreased. Emigration to was to Germany, then to the United States and Australia and New Zealand. In 1898 there were 607 Jews in Śrem, 10.5% of the inhabitants. After World War I, many Jews from the region moved, mainly to Germany. After 1934 it was very rare that Jews gathered but the rabbi visited on Wednesdays. When World War II began, 26 Jews lived in Śrem and only 2 survived the Holocaust. At the bottom of the page is an illustration from a 1930 postcard of a hotel at the corner of ul. Poznańska and the market square. In 1910 it belonged to relatives of Hermann Schreiber and is currently a hotel and the "Metropol" restaurant. Julius Schreiber, 1848-1932, cousin of the father of Hermann Schreiber, Pedazura, was born there. He was the son of Joseph Schreiber [Cf. Schreiber, Mayer, of Schrimm, Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 83.] and Rosalia, née Holz [perhaps a descendant of Leib Holz of Schrimm. See Luft, p. 38], who graduated from the high school in Śrem in 1870. He then studied medicine at the universities of Leipzig and Königsberg and became a professor of pathomorphology (changes of disease in tissues and organs) and director of the University in Königsberg Polyclinic and author of dozens of scientific papers. He died in Königsberg. His biography is included in the Słownik absolwentówgimnazjum i liceum w Śremie, 1858-2008 [Dictionary of graduates of the middle school and high school in Śrem, 1858-2008], in preparation, p. 11.

The synagogue burned before 1793, and services were held in the city coachhouse, p. 10. In 1794 Schrimm had 718 Catholics, 19 Protestants, and 368 Jews (5063 Catholics, 1607 Protestants, 5 other Christians, and 318 Jews in 1910, p. 11, n. 1, and p. 20) living in various districts; they could not acquire houses outside certain districts as a result of a 1609 magistrates' decree issued by King Sigismund August (p. 11, n. 2, indicating that a now destroyed record in the old Posen archives was the source). The Jews included 12 butchers, 4 shoemakers, 1 furrier. The Jews primarily lived from small trade with wool and leather, p. 11. In 1794, the Jews could ask for help with tax reductions from the Polish governor directly, a privilege when they had to pay too dearly, p. 13. The Jews had to pay the Polish governor yearly protection of 500 fl. p. (= 83 Reichsthaler) and in addition had also to pay 2 tons of beer and 16 quarts of brandy, p. 14. In 1803 there were 1453 inhabitants, including 32 Protestants and 293 Jews, p. 20. All of the legal constraints were ameliorated over time, pp. 20-21. The Generaljudenreglement für Süd- and Neuostpreußen of 17 April 1797 forbid peddling. The liquor tribute was prohibited in an 1803 law. However, the Jews continued to live in poverty. By agreement dated 20 May 1795 the Jews bound themselves to subsidize the poorhouse at the rate of 50 Taler yearly, p. 21.

Another brother, Raphael Mielziner, was born in Schubin on 27 September 1837. A sister, Ester Mielziner, was born in Schubin on 3 June 1839. The next brother, Jacob Mielziner, was born in Schubin on 11 May 1843 and served in the Franco-Prussian War at Metz. Another sister, Judith Mielziner, was born in Schubin on 10 December 1844., while sister Amalie Mielziner, born in Schubin on 23 July 1846, died there on 2 March 1847. Various other Mielziners are discussed and comments are included on the accuracy of the information in an exchange between the author and Walter Mielziner. The author is apparently unfamiliar with Ashkenazic naming practices since the "? Mielziner" would normally be Leib Meir Mielziner, based upon those practices as shown in the information supplied elsewhere in the information available to the parties.

POSEN PROVINCE AND VICINITY, supra.] Well-known rabbis in Schwerin were Mordechaj ben Meier ha-Kohen (c. 1710), Ibi Hirsch of Prague (1763), Josua Spira of Frankfurt/Oder (1771), and Hirsch Aaron London (1777-1890). From Schwerin came Professor Gassel Simon ben Israel, a rabbi in Amsterdam, who died there in 1712, author of numerous biblical and Talmudical commentaries; and Eliakim ha-Kohen Schwerin Goetz, born 1760, the most famous representative of the Schwerin Jewish community, who later became famous as one of the greatest Hungarian rabbis in the nineteenth century, p. 217. The history of the cemetery discussed, pp. 218-222. Tombstones, epitaphs, and gravestone symbolism discussed, pp. 222-225, including mention of two tombstones, one for Mordechaj Aaron, a rabbi and teacher, and the other for Cwi Hirsch, a charitable man, both presumably in the 19th century, p. 223, n.26; and mention of David Meyer, p. 225, and p. 225, n. 34, indicating that he was founder and rector of the Jewish school in Schwerin, 1833-1861. He supported the Haskalah and was a progressive educator. He taught foreign languages, including Hebrew, German, French, Italian, and Latin. He also taught music. He garnered much recognition from the residents of Schwerin and from public authorities. Photographs of some of the Jewish gravestones occur on pp. 226-231. 1. The oldest preserved tombstone in the Schwerin cemetery: Zele Miriam, daughter of Joseph Zelig Segal, No. 497. She died 1736, p. 226. Headstone 12 is for David Meyer, educator, who died on 1 April 1861. In relevant part, the epitaph states that he was a husband, the son of Meyer. He was a school rector and died on the 7th day of Passover, being buried in 21 Nissan 5621. His career lasted 40 years. [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 64.], p. 230. Illustrations of various designs on gravestones, pp. 2-5, 7, 9, 11-13. According to the 1793 census 720 Jews lived in Schwerin, while in 1925 there were 25 and none in 1939, pp. 2, 26, and 27. Many famous rabbis were born in Skwierzyna, among the most famous of whom was Prof. Gassel Simon ben Yisrael, rabbi in Amsterdam (where he died in 1712), author of numerous works, including the world-famous book, Sefer hachajim. Other famous Skwierzyna rabbis in the 18th century include: Mordechai ben Meier-haKohen (c. 1710), Ibi Hirsch of Prague (1763), Joshua Speyer of Frankfurt/Oder (1771), and Aron Hirsch London (1777-1790). The most prominent representative of the Skwierzyna community was Eliakim ha-Kohen Schwerin Goetz, born 1760, later famous as one of the greatest 19th century Hungarian rabbis, p. 7. Naturalization of the Jews discussed. In the same year the Prussian government issued a consent to David Mayer, Skwierzyna Jewish teacher, to operate a new private Jewish elementary school in 1833, p. 8, in a spacious school building still located at Czerwonego Krzyża (Red Cross) Street. The city paid 200 thalers/year to cover expenses. The newly established school had 4 classes and 4 teachers. The rector was David Mayer, a supporter of the Haskalah, who saw the need to build a new model of education among the Jews. He taught the Hebrew, German, French, Latin, and Italian languages and music in an innovative way. He died 1 April 1861. In 1833 Jewish community was a corporation. The old synagogue, built after a fire in 1784, was too small to accommodate the faithful so on 15 April 1839 (on the lot on Krumme Straße [Crooked Street], today ul. Jageiłły, per p. 9, n. 16] the community laid a cornerstone. The synagogue was dedicated on 1 January 1841, p. 9. Rabbi Heymann Joel (1832-1845), made changes to the liturgy and was replaced by the first Skwierzyna rabbi with a doctorate, Dr. Simeon Schwabacher, who, p. 9, had been a rabbi in Prague, Hamburg, and Gorzów. After Skwierzyna (to 1856) Schwabacher moved to Odessa. The Międzyrzecz Orthodox synagogue, built in 1824 was typical with separate parts for men and women. The community built a Jewish Hospital in 1865 and an orphanage for boys. Jean Benda, the founder came from Berlin. According to former residents of Skwierzyna, the mother of prominent Nuremberg American politician Henry Kissinger was born and lived on Reuter street in Skwierzyna, p. 10. The first large Skwierzyna company was founded by a Jew, Simon Boas in 1814. It was a wholesale company, trading in goods such as iron, coal, and spirits. It supplied the surrounding counties. The Boas family operated the company until 1936, when Adolf Hitler's followers, under the Nuremberg Laws, received the company. Jacob Levy's company traded in grain and seed potatoes, using grain storehouses. Arthur Joel was a large wholesaler dealer in slaughtered animals. Animals from throughout the county were brought there and almost 95% of the sales were to Berlin and other large cities. Two Jewish merchants, Hermann Schlesinger and Gustav Schramm, were horse traders. Their business declined after 1918 when the area was annexed by the Polish government. In 1933 Schramm emigrated to Israel, and, together with his son, worked as a veterinarian in Haifa, p. 11. By 1918 Jakub Cohn was the biggest entrepreneur in Skwierzyna, the owner of the largest wholesaler of hides in eastern Germany. He bought raw hides in Wielkopolska and in areas annexed by Russia, processing and selling them. Cohn was the largest taxpayer in town. After his death in 1920, Julius Hiller took over the business, which he headed until the mid-1930s. In 1859 Solomon Stargardt founded another trading company in Skwierzyna. Stargardt was a leading wholesaler of crockery and had a shop on ul. Postal. In 1935 the Nazis forced the Stargardt family to sell the company and leave Skwierzyna. Adolf Jonas sold furs and hats in Skwierzyna until the Germans confiscated it in 1939. Felix Mendel had a shoe shop in the market square. The shop had existed from the mid-nineteenth century but the owner was forced to leave it in 1936. The Stern, Pinkus, and Gerson families also maintained shop in the town. The anti-Semitic policies that the Nazis pursued after 1933 also led to the dissolution of the local branch of the Bank Wschodni. Max Hanff was the owner in the market square of a printing shop and editor of Skwierzyńska Gazeta Powiatowa. Hanff was a Polish Christian of Jewish ancestry but classed as a Jew by the Nazis and so was stripped of his printing house and newspaper. As was the custom, in 1929 the mayor and town council expressed good wishes on the occasion of the golden wedding anniversary of Hermann Gerson and his wife. In 1933 the same Hermann Gerson saw his son Arthur dragged through the town on a wagon with dung and hung from his neck was a placard saying "I am a filthy Jew," (as reported by letter of Lothar Gerson, 1994, to the author), p. 12. There were 720 Jews in Skwierzyna in 1793 but none after 1939, back page.

Swarzędzkie cmentarze innych wyznan [Swarzędz cemeteries of other religions], pp. 23-35: The Swarzędz Jewish cemetery (kirkut) was mentioned as being near the synagogue in 28 August 1638, provision 28, second part, which grants the right to fence the Jewish cemetery. In the Jewish privilege of 3 June 1628 the cemetery is described as being east of the present Plac Powstańców Wielkopolskich [Great Poland Uprising Plaza]. In 1674 there were 142 Jews in Swarzędz, p 23. The Jewish cemetery is now located at ul. Poznańska and is divided into an old and new part. Initially, the graves of children were buried in the new part while the old part was divided into male and female sections. It may also have been used to bury Torahs but contains no monument for any sage. Nevertheless, there were probably monuments for rabbis. The cemetery was surrounded by a brick fence with a metal gate. It contained the grave of a Jew named Berwin who died at age 105 years, probably in 1935 when only a few Jews still resided in Swarzędz, p. 24. In 1940 the Germans began to create a city park on the site of the cemetery "only for Germans." All graves were leveled and the gravestones removed. Many of the gravestones were used for building materials, especially as sidewalks for streets. The Germans forced Polish children to disassemble the fence for later use as street paving. After the war a building was erected on the site to serve as a nursery for a furniture factory. Today only old trees remain from the time of the cemetery. The maximum Jewish population (in 1834) in Swarzędz was 1665 people, being 59% of the total population. By 1939 the number of Jews had decreased to a total of 23% of the total population of 6,449. This was the only Jewish cemetery in the Swarzędz area, p. 25. Pochowki Żydów z getta i obozów pracy [Jewish burials in the ghettos and work camps], pp. 40-43: One burial ground exists in Kobylnica at the corner of ul. Swarzędzki and ul. Dworcowa, near the house of Mizerski, originally a ghetto for Polish Jews. During the "Final Solution" in December 1941 approximately 2,000 people were taken to a death cam in Chełmno, called Kulmhof. From April 1942, 6 barracks existed until August 1943, being used as a labor camp for Jews who were building a railway between Kobylnica and Kobylipole via Franów. They were also building a road to Uzarzewo. The work camp is marked by a plaque at the railway station, p. 40. Photograph of the plaque with its text, p. 41. There is a claim that some Jews who died were buried under or near the railway, but this claim is undocumented. Some Jewish victims were buried in the Catholic cemetery in Uzarzewo in the new part created in 1866. Near the fence is a mass grave of Jews who died in the labor camps in Kobylnica, Sarbinów, Gruszczyn, and probably Gortatowo. The text of the plaque on the mass grave appears on p. 41. No one knows the number of Jews buried there, perhaps up to 300, p. 42. At the Catholic cemetery there had been several gravesites, later consolidated so that the Uzarzewo location is the only mass grave of Jews still remaining in the Swarzędz area today, p. 42.

Jeziorna; the Jews first settled in Osieczna in the 17th century and the cemetery was founded in the first half of the 18th century, with the last burial there occurring in April 1900, when Rosalia Hoffmann, née Guttmann, the widow of a carpenter, was buried there. The Jewish Community owned the cemetery for the nest 20 years, however, until the last Jews left Osieczna. In 1922 the town government fixed the fence because the Jewish Community in Leszno had no money to protect the cemetery. Many stones were destroyed by the mid-1930s when many stones were piled up at the back of the cemetery, near the fence. The fence was then disassembled, and the area was left as a park, p. 24. During World War II, the German occupation made restoration impossible. The Germans planned to make the area into a city gardening facility. Some old trees were cut down, some graves removed, and some stones were taken for building material. After World Ward II, houses were built on the site. Only one oak tree was left near the original main gate, p. 25. Osieczna's surviving mazevot detailed, pp. 27-34, with information largely the same as in "Żydowskie nagrobki z Osiecznej," infra, this heading. However, there are photographs of the following 7 gravestones: Icchak Ajzyk, p. 27; Izrael, son of Gerzon ha-Cohen, p. 28; the woman, wife of Gerzon Cohn [Kac], p. 29; Hinde, wife of Kalman [?] of Leszno, p. 30; Ferke, wife of Zelig, p. 31; Benjamin Aaron, p. 32; and Wolf Kalmus, p. 34. These illustrations are used to indicate the 6 different kinds of formulae found in the inscriptions on the gravestones in the cemetery.

Joel Simon Pakuscher, also known as Joel Posner, born Poznań 12 November 1772 and died Leszno 29 August 1837 (= 28 Elul 5597); he had been the Osieczna rabbi since 1811, becoming the rabbi in Leszno in 1832. His wife Jette was born Leszno 13 August 1780. His children were daughters Dorel, born 12 May 1811, Pine, born 16 June 1814, Jule, born 18 December 1819, and son Michael, born 13 February 1816. All were born in Osieczna. Baruch Moses Jaskulski, born 1797 and died Osieczna 8 December 1852, son of Jacob Jaskulski or Jaskulka. He was naturalized in Książ Wielkopolski on 25 July 1834, where he was a deputy rabbi for 18 years, per Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 41. From Książ he moved to Mieszków where he worked for 3 years. About 1850 he settled in Osieczna, but by then he is not referred to as a rabbi but as cantor and ritual slaughterer. He married Hannchen Golinski and fathered 5 children, including two daughters, Jettel and Ernestine, pp. 12-13. Joseph Jacob Judelewicz, fl. 1817-1820 had a daughter Beyle, born 30 August 1817 and died 6 December 1817, a daughter Rachel, born 30 October 1818, and a son Joachim Fabisch, born 6 August 1820. His wife was named Chaja. Aron Reichert, cantor and ritual slaughterer, born c. 1795, he was a son of Elias Reichert. He was in Osieczna by 1822. In 1834 he was in Grabów on the Prosna and was naturalized there in 1835. [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 75]. In Osieczna on 2 July 1822 he married Minna Potsdam, also known as Potsdammer, born c. 1796, probably of a Leszno family. About 1830 he married Mindel Basch. From the second marriage there was one son, Marcus Baer, born 13 June 1832. He died in Kościan on 23 April 1905, living much of his life in Powidz. Other cantors and ritual slaughterers after the time of Aron Reichert were Moses Bilewski in 1825, Marcus Joachim from 1830-1831, and Lippmann Fränkel, who was in charge from May 1834 to 1843. He obtained a naturalization patent in September 1835. [See Luft, p. 24.] He married Minna Itzig or Baer, and they had the following children: Salomon, born 22 February 1836; Rachel, born 18 September 1838; Bertha, born 23 February 1841; and Heymann, born 21 July 1843. Cantor and ritual slaughterer Gabriel Hirsch Lewin came to Osieczna about 1840, having studied under the Tsaddik Elijahu Guttmacher of Grodzisk Wielkopolski. He remained at least until 1846. In the 1860s and 1870s he was referred to as a assistant rabbi and rabbi in Czempin (1862), in Jaraczewo (1866-1873), and Grodzisk Wielkopolski (c. 1875), where he settled after the death of his teacher. He was married to Ernestine Quartiermeister and had the following children: Daughter Frederike, born 19 May 1840, died 8 November 1841; Charlotte, born 3 January 1842, died 24 February 1842; and a second Charlotte, born 20 November 1842; as well as sons Loeb, born 15 Mary 1845, and Moritz, born 2 August 1846. The next cantor and ritual slaughterer was Isaac Heimann, born c. 1826, son of cantor Abraham Heimann of Wieleń. Initially working in Inowrocław, in November 1853 he arrived in Osciezna. His first wife, Johanna Gross, died on 28 November 1852. In January 1854 in Osieczna he married Rosa Noah of Mosina, daughter of the merchant Samuel Noah; she was born 10 June 1827. Rosa died a few months after the wedding on 4 November 1854. Heimann married a 3rd time in Osieczna on 4 September 1855 to Jettel Kronheim, born 5 July 1825. She was the daughter of saloonkeeper and farmer Salomon Kronheim and Pessel, née Jaffe. Information on children is lacking. In 1856 the Jewish Community employed cantor Joseph Joachim at least until 1868. In Osciezna he married Karolina Salomon of Poznań, p. 13, on 6 October 1856. The issue of the marriage was Gustaw, born 2 August 1857, Liebe, born 9 October 1858, Jenny, born 6 May 1860, Rudolph, born 14 December 1862, twins Jettchen and Gotlieb, born 14 September 1864, Selma, born 6 August 1866, and Salomon, born 20 August 1868. The next cantor and ritual slaughterer was Moses Cohn, previously employed in Budzyń from 1876-1877. In 1878 he came to Osieczna. His wife was Paulina Silberstein, descended from midwives of Great Poland. From the marriage were born Anna, born Budzyń 1876, died Osieczna 28 March 1879; Helena, born Budzyń on December 1877; and Louis, born 26 August 1878. Moses Cohn left in 1879 or 1880, whereupon the Jews of Osieczna used the services of the cantor and ritual slaughterer in Leszno. Jacob Lehrer was employed as teacher in Osieczna, appearing on the list of members of the Jewish Community in 1795. Then Aron Wolff was employed as a teacher, having been born in 1791 or in 1801 in Piaski Wielkopolskie, and dying on 2 February 1861 in Osieczna. He was the son cantor and ritual slaughterer Mendel Wolff I of Piaski and his wife Leya or Lei. Aron Wolff arrived in Osieczna probably in 1831 and in December of that year married Chaja (Hanna) Elias, born c. 1799, daughter of merchant bookseller Elias David, and widow of Fabisch Wolff. The children of the marriage were Scheine, born 24 November 1833, Elias Aron, born 28 March 1835, Meier, born 9 August 1838, Mindel, born 9 June 1840, and Rifka, born 3 January 1843. In the 1830s and 1840s, the teacher was David Loebel Stillmann, private teacher and ritual slaughterer, born in Leszno 1812. He returned to Leszno in May 1838. The religious teacher at that time was Simon Frontzek, born Leszno 14 December 1819, son of factor Elkan Saul and Taube Frontzek. He left Osieczna in October 1839. In November 1840 came Zacharias Neustadt, born in Leszno 1821, son of the tailor Moses Neustadt and his wife Mindel née Loewenheim. He left for Leszno in December 1841. To Leszno came the Talmudist Mendel Pulwermann, born Krotoszyn 1 June 1820 came to Leszno and at the same time was teaching in Osieczna. He left Krotoszyn in June 1844, teaching in Osieczna until 1845. He is mentioned for the last time in Leszno in 1849. The Jewish school in Osieczna continued until 1870, when it was absorbed by the Lutheran school, p. 14.

—, "Ściana Pamięci w Osiecznej" [The Wall of Remembrance in Osieczna], under the heading "Judaica," IKT, 2005, No. 6, pp. 27-28. All gravestones and fragments of gravestones found in the Jewish cemetery in Osieczna were mounted in the wall, which is near the cemetery in a park in the town. Of the 33 items collected, 9 were from the 18th century, p. 27, and 24 from the 19th century. The last funeral took place in 1900. All of the gravestones found were of sandstone, but only a few were complete. Most have enough text to identify the person and the death date. Records exist for vital statistics on the Jewish community in the Archiwum Państwowe w Lesznie/District State Archives in Leszno. The oldest stone dates from 1750 and is for Lea, daughter of Jechiel Jekel, and the wife of Gershon Kac [Katz]. She died on 7 Elul 5510=8 September 1750. The newest gravestones are from 1889 and are for Johanna Breslauer, the daughter of innkeeper Marcus Breslauer [Cf. Breslauer, Moses, in Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 12]. She died on 1 July 1889. The other gravestone is for Feigele (Frederike) Fabisch, daughter of Michael Hülsen, and the wife of Jehosze [Joshua] Fabisch. She died on 15 June 1889. There were 12 gravestones identified as pertaining to men and 14 for women. For the other 7, the text was too incomplete to even identify gender. There is a similar wall previously erected in Kobylin, p. 45.

—, "Żydowskie nagrobki z Osiecznej [Jewish graves in Osieczna], PL, No. I/C [=100], 2004, published 4 April 2005, pp. 32-45, including bibliography, p. 45. First part. The Regional Museum in Leszno holds 400 Jewish gravestones from a number of Jewish cemeteries, including 27 from Osieczna, p. 32. The Osieczna Jewish cemetery was probably started in the first half of the 13th century and the last burial was of Rosalie Hoffmann, née Guttmann, who died on 10 April 1900. The cemetery was maintained for the next 20 years until the last Jews left. It then deteriorated. By the end of 1930 all of the gravestones were piled together at the back of the cemetery and the fence disassembled. The cemetery was left as a park. Later the stones were taken into town and used by local citizens as building material. After the war, single-family houses were erected on the site of the cemetery. All that currently remains of the cemetery is one huge oak tree, near where the entry gate stood. Eight stones remain from the 18th century. There were 3 kinds of gravestones, mazzevahs [vertical plates with inscriptions], tumba [sarcophagus], and ohe [tent], a small building above the grave of a sage with a mazzevah inside, p. 33. The most popular gravestone was the mazzevah, often demonstrating the Protestant influence in decoration because they often came from the same workshops, demonstrating the assimilation taking place. With respect to the symbols on gravestones, plant motifs were the most common. Others included a hand in the gesture of blessing; a lion's head; a bunch of grapes, as a symbol of Israel; a clock; and an axe, indicating a sudden end of life; columns; a bay leaf wreath, symbolizing victory or the "Christian hope of resurrection," not originally a Jewish symbol. Most gravestones were painted red, black, light blue, gold, silver, yellow or brown, with one color only on the remaining stones, p. 34. The texts were often painted with black paint on a white base. The mazzevahs maybe also have been painted, such as in the case of the gravestones from Turek in eastern Wielkopolska. Traditionally, white and black letters were symbols of light and dark or of life and death. All of the remaining gravestones have a similar style. Of these, there were two types of mazzevahs but other stones were too damaged to say if they were in a similar style. The first style is a stone in the shape of a stretched rectangle, while the second was a stretched rectangle with an arch on top. There were two kinds of arches, a simple one, and an undulating arch, starting from the base of the top of the rectangle and scalloped in a down, up, down fashion. The inscription field was always well-polished with the letters carved and regular and no decorative elements, except for separate verses, which were raised from the stone. With respect to the stones from the 18th and 19th centuries, the oldest is from 1750, and the newest from 1889. Due to the lack of full inscriptions, only 20 allow gender identification. There were 11 female and 9 males memorialized. Among the 8 18th-century inscriptions, there were 3 males and 5 females. For the 140-year period during which the stones were created, the fashion remained constant, employing common elements, p. 35. Some stones are in German and Hebrew, especially after the mid-19th century. By the end of the 19th century, the inscriptions are sometimes completely in German. On none of them was there a two-sided inscription, such as is found in other cemeteries, p. 36. The author then discusses the formulae of the epitaph inscriptions, pp. 36-40. The cemetery stones were made of sandstone. The author augmented some of the following inscription information from archival sources.

1. Lea, daughter of Jechiel Jekel and wife of Gerszon Kac [Katz], who died on Wednesday, 7 Elul 5510 = 8 September 1750.
2. Icchak Ajzyk, son of Gerszon Kac, died 13 Tishri 5519 = 15 October 1758, a rabbi [with gravestone photograph].

20. Eite (Ita), daugther of Eliezer, wife of Lippmann, died ?, p. 44.
Many more gravestones are in the Osieczna area, often serving as curbstones or as thresholds to a house or as a method of flattening a path. These gravestones could be recovered only if dug up from under the asphalt. Many more are still to be discovered. There are 8 padlocks also in the Leszno Museum's collections. They were put into graves as a symbol of separation of the dead from the world of the living and discovered in 1994 on Jewish cemetery ground. Due to their bad condition, they are not displayed. During the same 1994 excavation, medieval pottery was found, proving that a much older medieval cemetery existed on the site, although probably not Jewish.

At American Jewish Archives, CT275.P6L6; and a the Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957; location: A 42/5. The following derives from the first item cited. Poznanski was buried in an unmarked grave in Salem Fields Cemetery, Brooklyn, NY on 12 January 1879, far from the graves of his wife, daughter, one of his brothers and his Confederate soldier son, Gustavus Poznanski, Jr., all buried in Charleston, SC. Gustavus Poznanski, Sr.'s birth is documented in the Minute Books of Beth Elohim synagogue, Charleston, SC, indicating that he was born in Storchnest, "Poland" and listing his birthplace, parentage, brothers, and sisters, p. 6. A 17 January 1879 article in The Jewish Messenger indicates that Poznanski died on a Friday at age 76 in New York City as he was struck in the head by a horse while alighting from a Broadway stagecoach, p. 7. Poznanski was buried in Salem Fields Cemetery of Congregation Emanu-El, Lot No. 2142, purchased by Joseph Poznanski on 10 January 1879. Gustavus Poznanski was buried there on 12 January. Also buried there were a child, Eddie, on 24 December 1880; and Joseph Poznanski, 3 December 1916; and Rosalie Poznanski, 13 September 1922. Two footstones read: "Joseph Poznanski, Aug. 24 1841, Sept. 8, 1916" and "Rosalie Poznanski, May 6, 1840, Sept. 10, 1922," p. 8. Gustavus Poznanski was born in Storchnest in either 1803 or 1804 or 1805, depending upon which source is consulted, p. 9. He came to the USA about 1831; he was the son of Joseph and Sarah, the eldest of 7 children. His brothers and sisters were Leah, Rebecca, Frederika, Heiman, Hinde, and Gershon. In Hebrew Gustavus' name was Gedalia, p. 10. In 1841 Gustavus' parents continued to live in Storchnest: Joseph was there when he was age 36, and his mother died there when he was age 21, after coming to the USA. Poznanski came to New York, probably via the port of Hamburg at age 27 about 1832, p. 13. He probably came as an Orthodox butcher, rather than as a Reform activist, but the first records place him in New York City in 1832, p. 14. He went to Charleston in January 1837 where his brothers Gershom [sic] and Hyam also resided in that year. On 5 December 1838 he married Miss Hetty (Esther G.) Barrett, only daughter of Isaac Barrett. He was age 33 and she was age 18, p. 16. Hyam's tombstone in Charleston indicates that he died on 5 Elul 5599 or [Thursday, 15 August] 1839. Esther and Gustavus had 4 children: Isaac B.; Joseph, born 24 August 1841; Gustavus, Jr., born Charleston, September 1842 and died Secessionville, SC, age 19; and Sarah, the last being born 20 September 1844, named for Gustavus' deceased mother, p. 17. Gustavus Jr. died on 16 June 1862, a member of the Sumter Guards; his obituary appeared on 25 June 1862 in The Courier, Charleston, p. 18. Esther's will was signed on 22 March 1870 in South Carolina. She died on 9 April 1870 age 49 years, 10 months 2 days and is buried in Charleston, p. 21. Sarah Barrett, only daughter of Gustavus and his late wife Esther G., died and was buried in Charleston, pp. 21-22. Poznanski retired on 29 May 1850 and was succeeded by Julius Eckman of Richmond, p. 32. There was a disproportionate number of Polish Jews in Charleston; in the 1854 cholera epidemic, many tombstones listed the place of birth as Poland, Posen, or Prussian Posen, p. 46.

Unnumbered third and fourth pages show Jewish cemetery gravestone photographs. Before the Second Partition of Poland, 1793, Schermeisel belonged to Meseritz County. Schermeisel was a private town, belonging to two von Kalckreuths and to Sophie Seidlitz., p. 3. The Jews had to pay various charges, including protection money, and were tolerated because of it. At the end of the 18th century, 30-40% of the town's inhabitants were Jews but a much higher percentage of the taxes paid, p. 4. In the 1830s and 1840s 300 Jews or about 40% of the inhabitants lived in Schermeisel. Because an earlier synagogue was too small, a new one was built opposite and completed in 1823, a fact noted on the main entrance doorposts of the new synagogue. The synagogue was completely renovated in 1881. The building still stands, but no one knows what the interior looked like. There was also a Jewish school. In 1855 there were 177 Jews in Schermeisel, after which the number dwindled. In 1881 Salomon Gutermann, was Chairman of the Jewish Community in Schermeisel. His deputy was Moses Heymann, and the board included Wolf Gutermann, Paul Hirsch, David Gutermann, Moritz Neumann, and Isidor Gutermann. In 1910 24 Jews lived in Schermeisel, p. 6. The largest store belonged to Max Gutermann, who die din 1830; he was among the last Jews to be interred in the Jewish cemetery. In 1932 27 Jews lived in Schermeisel. Julius Gutermann was the Chairman of the Jewish Community and Paul Paul was his deputy. The family Gutermann included Betty, born 8 December 1882, deported to Sobibor 13 June 1942; Meta, born 22 August 1887, sent to Auschwitz 29 November 1942; Selma, born 6 February 1877, murdered in Kulmhof an der Nehr 5 May 1942; and Wolfgang, born 27 April 1910, deported to the Riga Ghetto in December 1941, p. 7. In August 2007 there were 37 standing and 27 fallen gravestones; in April 2010 there were only 12 standing gravestones, p. 8. Friedlaender, Waldemar, Dagobert Friedlaender, 1826-1904: Ein Lebensbild, Munich: Knorr & Hirth, 1908, 113 pp, with frontispiece photograph and autograph of the subject. 4CT34. The author's brothers are named Adolf and Max, per the 1908 foreword. About 1700 a Friedlaender was a rabbi in Friedland and his son David was born in 1733, becoming rabbi of Rogasen, p. 1. His wife was Biene, p. 2. Their son Hirsch, born in Rogasen 1775, was the grandfather of Dagobert; his eldest daughter was Fradel. Hirsch died on 19 February 1843, 5 years before his widow. [Hirsch Friedländer in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 25, as a wooldealer in Brätz.] Hirsch's son, Jonas, one of many children, was the father of Dagobert and born on 13 April 1800 and brought up in his grandfather's house, p. 3. [Jonas Friedländer in Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p. 25, as a soapboiler in Chodziesen.] Jonas Friedlaender married Röschen Wolff of Chodziesen in 1823; they lived with his in-laws. Her parents Aron and Hinde Wolff, were born in 1771 and 1770, respectively. One son, Salomon in Berlin, was a founder of the Reform Community in Berlin. The first child of the grandparents, Rosalie, was born in 1824; then on 19 February 1826, Dagobert was born and named after David; next came Wilhelm in 1828; then Louis in 1829, p. 5. The mother [Röschen] died on 10 July 1829, p. 6. 2 years after the death of his first wife, the grandfather [Jonas] married Blume Silberstein, and they had two daughters and one son, Bertha, Albert, and Helene, the last of whom died of cholera in Chodziesen as well as the mother who died a few days earlier, p. 7. The father then married for a third time to Röschen Bock. Dagobert's great uncle was Wolf Alexander in Wollstein [See Luft, Naturalized Jews..., p.2], p. 8. Wollstein had 2,500 inhabitants in 1839, and Wolf Alexander was cantor there. His brother was the convert, Bishop Alexander of Jerusalem [of England]. Wolff Alexander [See entry in Landsmanshaftn chapter under "4. American Jewish Historical Society."] bought a bookstore for his two sons, Alexis and Jonas, and Dagobert worked there, p. 10. Dagobert's paternal uncle, Moritz Friedlaender, lived in Vienna, a Christian convert, working for S. H. Adler, p. 12. Alexander's wife was Luise, p. 24. Dagobert married Pauline Friedmann of Wollstein on 27 May 1850, p. 33. On 16 February 1853 their daughter Regina was born and on 15 November 1854, Hedwig; on 25 October 1856, Martin, p. 39. One year after his wife's death, Uncle Alexander married the teacher's widow Levy and they had two children. Rosalie, the eldest daughter of the grandfather, married J. Zander in Chodziesen and Wilhelm and Louis went to the United States. Albert went to California and died several years later, all before 1857. Wilhelm returned from California, p. 41. In April 1858 the family left Wollstein for Bromberg, p. 46. Dagobert's children were Waldemar, Regina, Hedwig, and Martin; Dagobert's brothers, Hermann, Rudolf, Hugo, and Max returned from New Zealand, p. 50. Pauline [Dagobert's wife] died on 27 May 1864 in Bromberg, p. 51. Rosalie married Julius Ebstein in Breslau, p. 54, and Dagobert married Laura Oettinger in Breslau on 23 November 1867, p. 54. His son Adolf was born on 23 January 1869 in Breslau, p. 56. Dagobert's youngest son Max was born on 23 June 1873; Hedwig married on 31 May 1874, p. 58. Waldemar went to London on 1 May 1880 as a commercial agent, pp. 62-63. Martin married Clara Friedlaender of Bromberg on 27 April 1884 in Frankfurt am main, p. 81. The eldest son married Flora Tichauer on 18 February 1886. Dagobert's 60th birthday was celebrated, p.84. Dagobert died on 27 June 1904, p. 105.

In the castle park in Schokken there are 7 gravestones from an early Jewish cemetery. They carry the names Rindfleisch, Kaprowicz, Wagner, and Wagner, née Ziegel [thus, female], p. 21. "Die jüdischen Nachbarn (1909)," pp. 78-84: In 1766 the Jews of Gollantsch received permission to build a synagogue; a Jewish prayer house had been in the town since 1763. At that time the community head was Marek Smol. In 1773 Gollantsch had 20 Jewish houses and 121 Jewish residents, being 35 men, 39 women, 18 boys, and 22 girls, plus 1 manservant and 6 maidservants. In 1788 the Jewish population was 149 persons, 33 families; in 1799 there were 250 Jews; in 1816 there were 121 Jews, in 1857 there were 200 Jews, consisting of 50 families. In 1905 there were 105 Jews. In the 1820s there were 20 children who attended the Jewish school, taught by teacher Alexander. In 1909 the Jewish Community leader was M. Glaß. The community had a Chevra Kadisha and supported a teacher, a cantor, and a ritual slaughterer. In Lekno there were 12 Jews in 1800 and 20 Jews in 1816. In Lopienno in 1658, there were 40 Jewish families. In 1800 20 Jews lived there and in 1816 32 Jews lived there. 10 Jews resided in Mietschisko in 1800 and 53 Jews in 1816. In 1856 with Lopienno 205 (39 families) resided there; in 1903 64 Jews. In 1909 there were 25 Jews in Mietschisko, p. 78. In 1836 6 Jews were naturalized there. In 1905 one Jew, merchant Bock was a member of the city council. Rabbi Hirsch Klausner, the author of 2 books, lived there. The prayer house was built there in 1855 and the ritual bath in 1863. In Schokken there was a rabbi since 1747, and a Jewish physician resided there since early times. From 1828 there was a Jewish midwife in the town. A 13 January 1826 declaration of Mos. Abraham and Jak. Oppenheim stated that there was a synagogue in town since ancient times, that the slaughterhouse there had been insured for 44 years and that since 29 August 1787 there had been a Jewish burial house, cemetery, and vegetable garden. The value of the synagogue on 27 September 1819 was 2,750 taler, the value of the slaughterhouse was valued at 1,000 taler, and the cemetery at 75 taler. Mosche Posner was a member of the Landtag for Schroda. He was the Jewish community chairman, p. 79. Various privileges and protocols discussed; after 1800 the Jewish children attended the Reformed [Protestant] school and later went to the non-denominational school, where a Jewish teacher gave instruction. The synagogue burned in 1796, and the Jewish Community of Koschmin gave 10 taler for its reconstruction. The synagogue was renovated in 1867 along with the bathhouse. In 1803 there were 338 Jews in Schokken; in 1840 there were 346; in 1846 there were 69 Jewish taxpayers, including 22 tailors, 5 butchers, 2 glaziers, 1 dyer, and 2 bakers. In 1849 there were 356 Jews in Schokken, in 1854 45 Jews; in 1859 38 Jews; in 1863 48 Jewish taxpayers; in 1871 231 Jews; in 1880 219 Jews; and in 1890 219 Jews; in 1899 there were 225 Jews (50 homeowners); in 1905 143 Jews (29 taxpayers), and in 1913 104 Jews (25 taxpayers). The Jewish Community leaders were Markiewicz, chairman, and Elias and Dreier, members; the teacher was Roller, and there were legacies from Aschheimer and Königsberger. In Berlin in 1922, the chairman of the Verein der Schokkener was Jul. Kochmann. The Jewish population in Wongrowitz in 1780 was 4, in 1793 was 28, in 1800 was 134, in 1816 was 543, in 1837 was 543, in 1862 was 663, in 1885 was 600, and in 1911 was 355. In 1786 Jak. Wolff of Mietschisko returned to Wongrowitz, p. 81. On 1 June 1794 part of Rogasen burned, and the protected Jews Hirsch Kallmann, Wolf Mazech, and Lewin Markus lost their houses. In 1800 the family Kallmann was still in Wongrowitz. About 1800 there was a Jewish surgeon and barber there. The first list of Jews in Wongrowitz dates from 1796. In 1804 the tailor Mos. Oser returned from Radzimin to Wongrowitz. The masters Abrah. Gelder, Sim. Krzyuski, Itzig Romowicz, and Lewin Markus were among 22 master tailors, but there were only 14 inside the town. Oser received permission on 2 October 1805 to conduct his trade in Wongrowitz. In 1795 the Builders' Guild gave a privilege to the Jew Lippmann to sell drinks. A rescript of 2 October 1795 gives butcher Bähr permission for 6 taler yearly to operate while 3 Christian butchers paid only 16 silver groschen each yearly. In 1803 only 3 real properties were held by Jews. On 17 March 1800 Levin Lippmann Brodie received permission to sell leather. In 1801 the South Prussian demesne bailiff created an index of all Wongrowitz Jewish families. There were 25 such families in 1801 and 34 in 1803., p. 82; and in 1805 the city had a Jewish teacher, pp. 82-83. Jak. Leyser Glück of Rogasen rented the dam and bridge toll from 1 June 1798 to the end of May 1802 for 60 taler yearly. From 1800 Alex. Lipman Brodie instructed the Jewish children. Later they attended a Lutheran school and from 1845 they attended a Jewish popular school. There were 2 classes, taught by teachers Loewenstein from Witkowo and Caspari from Wirsitz. Initially, the school was in Jak. Lippmann's house on the Market Square. and from 1847 in the rabbi's house in Schützenstraße; from 1900 in the new school house. The number of students was initially 161 and in 1872 was 100, then in 1880 it was 72, in 1884 it was 59, in 1890 it was 64, in 1895 it was 65, in 1900 it was 48, in 1905 it was 33, and in 1911 it was 31. The first synagogue burned on 9 February 1824 and in 1843 was rebuilt at the same location and renovated in 1856, p. 83. In 1834 the Jewish Community leaders were Dav. Ziegel [See Luft, Naturalized Jews ..., p. 78], Jul. Rothmann [Ibid., p. 97], and Falk Nathan. In 1836 95 Jewish families lived in Wongrowitz. The Jewish cemetery was acquired in 1801 or 1802 and located at the Durower Lake. It was rented from the municipality. The scholar Herm. Arnheim, rabbi in Glogau, writer of 2 books, who died in 1869, was born in Wongrowitz. Health officer Dr. Salomon Rothmann [See high schools chapter, Kgl. Realschule zu Wollstein], the chairman of the Verein der Wongrowitzer in Berlin and of the Administrative Council of the League of Posen Homeland Societies, born 1867, was also born in Wongrowitz, as were Specialist Physician Dr. Heinrich Becker of Hamburg, and S. Karpen, furniture maker in Chicago. The number of Jewish taxpayers from 1848 to 1884 is listed. Dr. Bernh. Rothmann, died 1879 in Cairo, Egypt. He was physician in ordinary at the court of the Viceroy [of Egypt]. Salo Daus was a non-commissioned officer, and the Emperor Wilhelm I personally gave him the Iron Cross. His brother Adolf was an honorary member and Second Deputy Chairman of the Verein der Wongrowitzer in Berlin. Both were grandchildren of the teacher M. L. Koppenhagen of Denmark, who came to Wongrowitz [Cf. L. Koppenhagen who left the Städtische Realschule zu Posen in 1857 after finishing Form 3 to go into business]. He died in Breslau, 1865. Miller, Irwin J., "The Last Jew in Wrzesnia (Wreschen)," The New Jewish Voice, Stamford, CT: United Jewish Federation of Greater Stamford, New Canaan, and Darien, Inc., Judith S. Hueber, ed., Vol. 5, No. 5, June 2003, p. 8. At Leo Baeck Institute, New York City, Edward Luft Collection, AR 6957, location S42/5. The author's great-grandmother, Röschen Ascher Pincus, was born in Wreschen in 1837. Notes that Haym Salomon left Lissa (now "Liezno" [sic, Leszno]) about 1772. In the early 19th century there was a large emigration of Posen Jews to the United States. In 1837 former residents of Posen founded a congregation still existing on New York City's Upper West Side. During the following decades Posen's Jews moved in increasing numbers to Berlin and other large cities in Germany, erroneously referred to as the "Prussian Empire." Most of the Jews in the California Gold Rush [after 1848] were from Posen. Heinrich Graetz, author of the 5-volume History of the Jews, went from Xionz [sic, Xions] to Breslau and Berlin, and Leo Baeck did the same much later. Moritz Pinner went to the United States to become a newspaper editor and became an ardent abolitionist; William Filene went to Salem, MA, to become the founder of a merchandising empire. Wrzesnia's most famous son was the synagogue music composer [and Berlin choral director] Louis Lewandowski. In Wreschen apprenticeships to the [Jewish] tailor's guild lasted three years, and only married men were admitted. Jews were allowed three weddings a year unless a potential groom had 400 florins, but learned grooms were exempt. In 1846 the Jewish population of Posen Province was more than 81,000, but by 1910 it was only 26,000. By 1900 there were fewer Jews in the whole province than there had been in 1797. In 1817, the percentage of the Jewish population of Wreschen was 50%, but in 1925 it was only 115 Jews or about 1%. Photographs of Röschen Ascher Pincus, 1837-1907, born in Wreschen, the mother of Adolf Pincus and great-grandmother of the author; Adolf Pincus, born in Wreschen, grandfather of the author; Pincus became bar mitzvah in 1876 in the Wreschen synagogue (photograph), built in 1874 after a fire destroyed the original wooden one of 1651; the Nazis destroyed the later synagogue in 1943, which stood opposite the city hall; photograph of Louis Lewandowski, 1821-1894, born in Wreschen; other modern photographs, including of the monument on the site of the destroyed synagogue.

Map Series, Gazetteers, Aerial Photographs, and Books and Articles Containing Maps and Geographical Data on Posen Province

The Library of Congress is not particularly well endowed with maps of Posen for the period prior to the end of World War II. However, the standard reference works for its holdings may be consulted. They are:

Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division, The Bibliography of Cartography, Boston: G. K. Hall, 1973, 5 vols., c. 90,000 entries. Z6028.U49 1973. There is also a 2 volume first supplement under the same call number issued in 1980.

Note: In map series, the letter "s" in the Library of Congress call number indicates that the item is a series and the number following it indicates the scale; e. g. s100 indicates that the map series is in the scale of 1:100,000. It is not uncommon for the same series to be produced in various scales.

Probably, an online facility is the most useful source of quick information but not for detailed maps of towns. The resource is Ravenstein, Ludwig, Atlas des Deutschen Reichs/An Atlas of the German Empire, <http://www.library.wisc.edu/etext/ravenstein/home.html>.

The general reference, giving coördinates for virtually every location in Posen Province, is:

Blackie, Walter Graham, ed., The Imperial Gazetteer: A General Dictionary of Geography, Physical, Political, Statistical and Descriptive ...With Seven Hundred Illustrations, Views, Costumes, Maps, Plans, & c..., Glasgow, etc.: Blackie and Son, 1855, Vol. I, AA-IZZ, pp. 1-1308; Vol. II, JAA-ZYW, pp. 1-1288 + Appendix, pp. 1-61. G102.B62. Inconsistent on the alphabetization of diphthongs. Some illustrations of towns in Posen. Some entries of larger towns in Posen but incomplete. Erroneously lists a number of Posen cities as being in Silesia. Useful for listing Jewish institutions in towns, where it lists such institutions as synagogues, Jewish schools, etc. in English. A companion set to this one is Blackie, Walter Graham, ed., The Imperial Atlas of Modern Geography: An Extensive Series of Maps Embracing the Most Recent Discoveries and All the Latest Political Divisions of Territory in All Parts of the World: Compiled and Engraved From the Most Authentic Sources, London: Blackie and Son, 1859, 100 [i. e. 156] leaves of plates, including index ["of about one hundred twenty thousand names"--added in 1860 version only]. G1019.B626 1859 G&MRR, and a later edition, G1019.B626 1860 G&MRR. Devised as a companion to the Imperial Gazetteer. Map 20: Prussia and Mecklenburg with inset sketch map of the Prussian Dominions shows Posen. A later version is Blackie, Walter Graham, ed., The Comprehensive Atlas & Geography of the World: Comprising an Extensive Series of Maps, a Description, Physical and Political, of All the Countries of the Earth; a Pronouncing Vocabulary of Geographical Names, and a Copious Index of Geographical Positions: Also Numerous Illustrations Printed in the Text, and a Series of Coloured Engravings Representing the Principal Races of Mankind, London: Blackie & Son, 1882, 304 pp. + 96 pp., with 67 [i. e. 122] leaves of plates. The Kartenabteilung of the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, Haus I, holds an extensive postcard collection showing views of various cities in Posen. The collection is arranged by the name of the city. For further map information at the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, see http://www.gbv.de/cgi-bin/nph-wwwredir/e250-039.gbv.de:39490/. The Biblioteka Uniwersytetu im. Adama Mickiewicza, Poznań, Poland, also has hundreds of thousands of postcards from the 19th and early 20th centuries, the earliest being from Poznań city in 1893. The postcards sometimes show scenes of Jewish interest, such as a picture of the synagogue in Koschmin on an 1898 postcard. The collection is held in the Pracowania ikonograficzna, Room 175. Jakub Skutecki, who understands German and some English, is the administrator in 2001. A large database of historically valuable map holdings prior to 1850 is available at http://ikar.staatsbibliothek-berlin.de and is growing in participants.

At the National Archives

The Cartographic Division of the National Archives, located at 8601 Adelphi Road, College Park, MD 20740-6001, has several thousand aerial photographs of Posen made by the Germans from 1940 to 1945, held in Record Group 373. These photographs were captured by the United States and held as war booty. The negatives have not survived, and the positives were made either by the Germans, the British, or the Americans.

A shuttle bus connects the main building of the National Archives in downtown Washington, DC with the College Park building at regular intervals throughout the workday starting at 8 a. m. The Cartographic Division is open, except for Federal holidays, from 8:45 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. on Monday and Wednesday, extended to 9:00 p. m. on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday; general ☎301-713-7030. Large worktables are available inside the building for using maps and other items.

The aerial photographs require considerable effort and patience to obtain a photograph, if one exists at all, of the desired location by using a laborious set of procedures. The Division has a large number of map series relating to Posen, including the following:

M404 — 1:500,000	M441 — 1:500,000	M541 — 1:250,000
M641 — 1:100,000	M841 — 1:25,000	M851 — 1:25,000

Series M951 covers over twenty large towns of Posen, but only the index, and not the maps themselves, are available at the National Archives. Apparently, the maps were never transferred to the National Archives by the Defense Intelligence Agency. Most of the maps themselves are available at the Geography and Map Division of the Library of Congress.

To begin the search procedure, one must first know the Greenwich coördinates of longitude and latitude. These can be obtained from the Gazetteer of Poland, see page N-1. Many other gazetteers, etc. will yield the same information for a given location. It is wise to save time by obtaining this information in advance, if possible.

The next step in the procedure to obtain the photograph of a desired location is to use a 1:250,000 scale map of the area selected from the index to series M541. After obtaining the location from the maps, the user must request the box containing mylar sheets for the specific north and east minute coördinates of longitude and latitude for that location. The seconds are ignored for this purpose. When the box arrives, the user must place the sheets [possibly as many as one hundred in each box] one or a few at a time over the specified starting point for that set of coördinates. If one or more of the mylar sheets then yield an indication that photographs of the desired location were made, the user must use a sheet provided to note the minute coördinates, the file number, scale, and date of the desired aerial photograph. Although not required, the user should note the name of the location from the map and the number of the photograph from the mylar sheet. Most photographs were greater than 1:15,000 while generally only those smaller than 1:13,000 yield sufficient detail to be of use in identifying locations within a town. Once the foregoing information is furnished, the attendant will bring the indicated box of photographs. There is about a 50% chance that the photograph is in the box, as it may have previously been removed by the Defense Intelligence Agency for a specific project and never turned over to the National Archives. The National Archives believes that the Defense Intelligence Agency would not be able to retrieve the item at this late date.

If the user does obtain a useful item, it may be copied on a photocopier or a much clearer negative can be obtained for a fee with a positive made for an additional fee. All aerial photographs were in black and white, none in color. The staff will do some searches and report the results without charge provided the work required is not extensive. Note that the staff must follow the complicated series of procedures to obtain the information. Currently, the minimum charge for mailed items is $6.00, and charges are at the rate of $1.80 per foot or 10 cents for a photocopy from paper, 25 cents for a photocopy from microform or microfiche.

Given the laborious nature of the search and the fact that the Bundesamt für Kartographie und Geodäsie, Richard-Strauss-Allee 11, D-60598 Frankfurt am Main, Germany ☎011-49-69 6333-1 Fax.: 011-49-69 6333-235; Email: bkg-mailbox@ifag.de; E-Mail: bkg-mailbox@ifag.de Website: http://www.bkg.bund.de/index_english.htm [The website is partially in English.], produces an outstanding series with at least as much detail in its 1:25,000 series, the determined researcher probably can purchase a much clearer product for less money from that Institute while expending far less time in the process.

Furthermore, the Library of Congress has maps in sufficient detail that, unless time comparisons need to be made, the coverage for Posen gleaned from the National Archives collection is probably not worth the time, effort, and likely frustration described above. The microfiche copies of the German 1;25,000 series in Geography and Map Division Collection generally is clear to the eye, easier to use, faster, and more accessible. The chief value of the National Archives collection would appear to be the chance to find a record of war destruction or interwar construction.

For those requiring greater historical detail, the maps in Berlin are useful. Maps lost from the collections of the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, Haus I, Berlin, Germany, as a result of war damage during World War II totaled less than 1%. Eventually, all of the maps held by the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, Haus II, will be transferred to Haus I. The two houses have a large collection of maps by Paul Baron and others, frequently under the "Signatur" 8° N 14..., where each dot stands for a cipher. Many of these maps are 20 to 40 cm. x c. 30 cm. range from c. 1:100,000 to 1:150,000, and date from the turn of this century.

In the late 1820s to the 1840s newly commissioned Prussian army officers were required to make maps of areas of Prussia not yet charted. The Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, Haus I, holds these maps, known as Preußische Urmeßtischblätter. One map was produced c. 1830 by Lieutenant Helmuth von Moltke, later to become a count and the field marshal whose strategic planning won the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71. He drew maps in Posen and Silesia.

List of Maps

In addition to the maps reproduced in this book and in The Naturalized Jews of the Grand Duchy of Posen in 1834 and 1835, the Library of Congress Geography and Map Division has numerous maps of Posen produced at various times. Some of the more interesting ones include an 1892 map of the city of Posen, 4 sheets of maps for Posen Province from the 1930s, Kreis Jarotschin in December 1939, and the city of Bydgoszcz, c. 1900. In 1943 the British War Office, Geographical Section, General Staff, photolithographed series No. 4435, Town Plans of Poland, First Edition, 8/43/G.S.G.S. The Library of Congress has the Poznań and the Bydgoszcz city maps, lacks that of Inowraclaw but has others for areas outside Posen Province. The New York Public Library may have some of the Liebenow maps. The full series should be available from the British Library, Map Library, 96 Euston Road, London NWI 2DB, United Kingdom; ☎011-44-20 7412 7702; Fax: 011-44 (0)20 7412 7780; E-mail: maps@bl.uk; Web: <http://www.bl.uk/collections/maps/service2.html>.

A good online map of the Province of Posen from the time of the Kaiserreich appears at <http://feefhs.org/maps/gere/ge-posen.html>. Always check the Select Bibliography under the town name for additional map citations.

Persons wishing further information on maps may consult the indices to the holdings of the Map Library of the British Library, the American Geographical Society, and the Maps and Prints Division of the New York Public Library. These indices are available at most larger reference libraries. Alternatively, each library may be contacted directly for its holdings and updates on its holdings, often online.

For each location shown here, maps are listed chronologically but distinguished as to whether the area represented is a province, administrative district, county, or city. References to HMPP refer to

The various local branches of the Archiwum Państwowych in Poland for the area under its jurisdiction maintain extensive map collections, some maps being in manuscript, and thus, presumably, being available nowhere else. The three local branches for the area covered by this book are at Stary Kisielin, just outside Zielona Góra; Poznań; and Bydgoszcz. See Polish Archives, Chapter 4, for the addresses of the relevant archives.

Chapter 13

Synagogues and Cemeteries

It is striking how many Jews migrated from Posen to Berlin, which accelerated after the Treaty of Versailles, following World War I. A very substantial number of those who migrated to Berlin were buried in Weißensee Cemetery in Berlin. See http://kehilalinks.jewishgen.org/berlin/Weisensee.html for some of the more famous Jews from Posen Province who were buried there.

The Nazis systematically destroyed every Jewish cemetery in those Polish areas which they incorporated into Germany as distinguished from those areas of Poland which they merely occupied. Accordingly, only fragments of tombstones survive for Posen Province, such as at Kórnik, where the entrance way to the synagogue shields those few fragments which have been salvaged. In Żabikowo, a suburb of Poznań, there is a Museum of Martyrdom, whose director is very interested in Jewish cemetery preservation. Mr. Beryt has found fragments of many Jewish tombstones. Researchers may address inquiries to Mr. Beryt at the Muzeum Martyrologiczne w Żabikowie k/Poznania, Poland, 62-031 Lubón 3, ul. Niezłomnych 2; ☎011-48-61-813-06-81, FAX 011-48-61-810-34-11. Visitors can reach the Museum by public bus from Poznań. For pictures from the following Jewish cemeteries that were in Posen Province, sometimes with English translation, see <http://www.kirkuty.xip.pl/index.htm>:

Bledzew (Blesen), Brójce (Brätz), Buk, Krotoszyn (Krotoschin), Gorzów Wielkopolski , Koronowo, Koźmin Wielkopolski (Koschmin), Leszno (Lissa), Międzyrzecz (Meseritz), Podziedziska (Pudewitz), Poznań (Posen), Pszczew (Betsche), Skwierzyna ((Schwerin), Szlichtyngowa (Schlichtingsheim), Trzciel (Tirschtiegel), Trzemeszno (Tremessen).

For a more general website with the photographs of a very large number of Polish synagogues, see <http://images.google.com/imgres?imgurl=http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/c/c3/Boznica_Brzeszcze.JPG/120px-Boznica_Brzeszcze.JPG&imgrefurl=http://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/Category:Synagogues_in_Poland&usg=__MaqIU6RR3qkw830qmNX8FXgTsRI=&h=104&w=120&sz=4&hl=en&start=1&tbnid=8rHQcXgzdm8tnM:&tbnh=76&tbnw=88&prev=/images%3Fq%3DBoznica%2BKepno%26gbv%3D2%26hl%3Den%26safe%3Doff>.

Two general websites that contain cemetery and other records with respect to the Jews of Great Poland are <http://www.jewishgen.org/cemetery/e-europe/poland.html> and <http://www.jewishtravel.pl/place_index.php?a=A#A>. For a website with many synagogue pictures, see http://www.museumoffamilyhistory.com/s/syn-europe-poland-1-A-J.htm and scroll down.

Moreover, for some things that have survived of the cemeteries, see the survey by the United States Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad, Gruber, Samuel, Myers, Phyllis, Bergman, Eleonora, and Jagielski, Jan, research directors and survey coordinators, Poland, Survey of Historic Jewish Monuments in Poland: A Report to the United States Commission for the Preservation of

For reports on any listed location, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and requests for the specific locations desired to Association of Jewish Genealogical Societies, 155 North Washington Avenue, Bergenfield, NJ 07621-1742.

The August 1993 version of the report to the United States Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad, Gruber, Samuel, and Myers, Phyllis of the Jewish Heritage Council, World Monuments Fund, Survey of Historic Jewish Monuments in Poland, 109 pp., including 3 appendices [see second edition, noted infra], indicates that the cemetery at Buk has some fencing and clearing of debris. The synagogue building at Środa Wielkopolska has been converted to another public use but has retained significant identifying elements of the original building. At Koźmin, the local Citizen's Committee helped school children set up 150 gravestones and construct an enclosure. The following information relevant to Posen Province synagogues appears in Appendix I of the Survey:

[37]Walter Mielziner of Denver, Colorado, who visited the site in April 1998, reported that he was informed by Zenon Erdmann, Curator of the Museum Ziemi Szubińskiej w Szubinie, that the synagogue, which was built in 1843, when his great-great-grandfather, Benjamin Mielziner, was rabbi there, fell into disuse by 1939 and was used after World War II for storing grain and cement. It was torn down in 1961, and its foundation now supports the local museum. On 12 September 1939 the Nazis executed two Jews in Schubin, one Schulzinger, a tailor, head of the Jewish community and his son. The family lived near the synagogue. The Nazis also shot seven women in Exin on 17 September 1939. A monument in the Jewish cemetery to 100 Poles shot in September 1939, includes the names of two Jews, but no Jewish gravestones survive.

The book concentrates on sepulchral monuments in Katowice but is useful for explaining the various phrases in gravestone inscriptions and the meaning of sepulchral decorations.

Every Konserwator Zabytków (Conservator of Monuments) for the relevant voivodeship has drawn and filed plans of the significant buildings in that voivodeship. Standing former synagogues are among these plans. Non-current files are usually housed in the voivodeship museum, normally located in the seat of the voivodeship or very nearby. In a few cases the museum is located in the former synagogue. For an example of the type of information available see Sekuła-Tauer, Ewa, et al. under Fordon in the Selected Bibliography.

Because so many Jews from Posen Province migrated to and were buried in Berlin, the following books may be of some help. However, be aware that none of them indicates the birthplace of the person named, except in the one case where indicated. Because birthplaces are not generally listed, there may be other persons from Posen Province mentioned in the following books, but they are not listed below because their birthplace in Posen was not certain.

Chapter 14

Partial List of Posen City Jewish Death Records

On the following pages appears a translation of some of the information to be found in Mormon Microfilm 1334544, item 1, made from records at the Deutsche Zentralstelle für Genealogie in Leipzig and more fully described in the chapter on German archival holdings. Many items were difficult to read and accuracy is therefore often problematical. Some of the dates are known to be incorrect so use with caution. Furthermore, the use of "son of" from the Hebrew might mean "child of" instead, as Hebrew usage does not always distinguish the sex of the child in this situation. The entire document is 127 pages in length with the first 69 pages being Posen City deaths and some other entries in, perhaps, three different hands. Pages 70-127 appear to be a list of the Pesach gelt for the same period as the death records. The records may possibly have been kept by Deputy Rabbi Samuel Lasi Vogelsdorf, deputy rabbi to Akiba Guens Eger, the last Gaon [Talmudic genius] of Posen. For how Eger looked, see the preceding page. For a discussion of Eger, Vogelsdorf, and Julius Knorr's painting "Der Marktplatz in Posen," see Simon, Hermann, Das Berliner Jüdische Museum, Union Verlag Berlin, 1988, especially pp. 77 ff., and Kaatz, Saul. See the Selected Bibliography under "Posen (City) for the full citations.

Jacobson, Jacob, "Das Naturalisationsverzeichnis der jüdischen Gemeinde in Posen," listed under Posen (City) in the Selected Bibliography contains additional information on some of the persons noted in this chapter.

The headings are self-explanatory except for the reference to "Page," which refers to the page in The Naturalized Jews of the Grand Duchy of Posen in 1834 and 1835 [first edition] on which the name of the same person or that person's spouse may appear. Names followed by # are reasonably certain to be the same person mentioned in that book and this one. The indication applies when following either a first or last name but only to that person, not to others mentioned in the listing. When a page number appears without a "#," it means that that surname may be found on that page in The Naturalized Jews. The number in the lower left-hand corner of the page refers to the page number in the original manuscript forming the basis for the translation. The listings cover the period from the 1823 to the 1853, not always in chronological order.

Translation of the Hebrew caption under the engraving: "Our Rabbi Akiba Eger [1761-1837] of blessed memory when he was 74 years of age [1835] on a street in the city of Posen [the Esterhazy Palace in what is now Eisenstadt, Burgenland, Austria, is in the background on the right] accompanied by two judges of the city, Rabbi Jacob Kalivari and Rabbi Moses Landsberg of blessed memory." From: Österreiches Jüdisches Museum in Eisenstadt, Postfach 67, Unterbergstraße 6, A-7001 Eisenstadt, Austria. The engraving must have appeared in this edition after 1838. See Israeli Archival Sources, "c. Israel Museum" "Not in Prints and Drawings Division," 1. See original pages 041 and 052 for the reports of the deaths of Landsberg's daughters, and page 056 for Landsberg's death in 1850.

In accordance with the orders of Akiba Eger, in this ledger will be listed all those who went to the world of truth and left over life to us, and God in His mercy will say to the Angel of Death “Desist!” [from Samuel II, XXIV:16] and ... and those lying in the earth will arise and praise [from Isaiah XXVI:14] and will shine like stars forever [from Daniel XII:3].

Heavy mourning and a bitter eulogy on the disaster that occurred in our community the eve of Tuesday, 16 Adar 5591 [1 March 1831] in that a house fell on the Judengasse [Street of the Jews], and, as a result of our sins, several honored men, Torah scholars and God-fearing, were killed. First, Rabbi Abrahm Schwerdnitz, the cantor of Mr. Nehemias' synagogue was found. Then, Rabbi Löbel, son of Moses Ettinger, deceased [see page 22 of The Naturalized Jews], was found, and after him Rabbi Jakiel Michel, sexton of the synagogue 'Ches' [possibly the Tailors' Synagogue (Beis Hakneses Chayatim)]. Then, the woman Rahel, widow of Fischel, was found, and, after them, the child, daughter of Moses Filehne# [See page 23 of The Naturalized Jews.]. May God remove all illness and all grief from us and from all the house of Israel.

He drowned himself in a pit of water. Gentiles found him just two hours later and brought him on a wagon to the hospital on the new market place. The physicians were unable to help him, and the chief rabbi Rabbi Akiba Eger, with his rabbinical court, were asked concerning him. They ruled that he should be given shrouds and a Talith and Kittel as is customary but to make some changes in the treatment of the body— not to bring him on the wagon which is usually used to carry bodies to the graveyard but rather to bring him on another wagon, and not to call him ..., and not to bring him through the Jewish street as is the custom; rather, they should take him directly from the hospital where he was lying through the Breslau [sic, Berlin?] Gate to the graveyard, and the grave should be slightly distant from the other dead; hopefully, this will be an atonement for him and "death will be swallowed up forever" [Isaiah 25:8].
